Trouble Brewing for the Shelter Island Bridge & Tunnel Authority

By Dan Rattiner

It's funny what people will do and what trouble they can get themselves into when they have some unused time on their hands. Take the case of Arthur Bloom of Shelter Island. Now semi-retired after years working for the telephone company, Bloom returned to Shelter Island, where he grew up, to raise his own kids — he started late as he says — in the sweet Shelter Island experience he remembered. He opened a consulting business to keep him busy during the day. And in his off hours — well — on Shelter Island, things get pretty quiet, particularly in the wintertime. So he made something up. But let him tell you about it.

"The reason Shelter Island is so peaceful, of course" he said, "is because you have to take a ferryboat to get here. There are very few cars. I thought I'd change that."

Bloom thus created (in his mind) bridges and tunnels to get to Shelter Island from the mainland, and, like a kid who might go down to the basement and build a whole Lionel model electric train set, he built it. In cyberspace. Online. He took the approach this way.

"If there were bridges and tunnels from Shelter Island to the mainland, the government agency that created it would have an official website. So that's what I built."

You can go see this website, of course. And you should. Go to www.sibta.com. It's the home of the Shelter Island Bridge and Tunnel Authority, and there, on the main page, you will see the logo for the Authority, the Authority's slogan which is "Nulla Tenaci Invia Est Via" (which means, in Latin, For The Tenacious, No Road Is Impassable) and all sorts of places on the site where you can go. There are sections of administration, employment opportunities, travel information, the two big public works projects which are the Stirling Memorial Tunnel to North Haven on the South Fork and the Sunrise Bridge to Greenport on the North Fork, and even the history of the authority. But first there is the mission.

"The Board (of Directors of the Shelter Island Bridge and Tunnel Authority) is charged with the fiscal responsibility that ensures continued financial stability of our organization."

To do this, there is the bridge and the tunnel. Look at the pictures of them. They are engineering marvels. The tunnel rivals in design the great Holland Tunnel that links New Jersey to Manhattan. In fact, it's designed EXACTLY like the Holland Tunnel.

"It's a photograph of the Holland Tunnel from the New Jersey side," Bloom said. "I swiped it off the Internet."

As for the bridge, it's just amazing. Here's the copy accompanying the photograph of it. "The Sunrise Bridge, a beautifully executed steel-girder, fixed-arch structure, soars 90 feet above mean high water, reaching majestically from the crest atop Smith's Cove on Shelter Island to its southern terminus and state of the art toll facility on the North Haven summit. Designed by the architectural firm of Weber-Bunge-Lange, of Deuseldorf, PA, the four-lane bridge and its ancillary facilities were constructed by the firm of Southfork Construction, Utilities, Maintenance, Bridging and Grading. At the top of its arch, the bridge is over 120 feet high, and the clear span is over

South O' the Highway (and the North too)

Longhouse Reserve, in East Hampton, has announced that playwright Edward Albee and designer Jack Lenor Larsen will co-chair the Committee for its 2006 Summer Benefit, Heightened Perspective, which will take place on July 22. The benefit will honor world-renowned artists Christo and his wife Jeanne-Claude, chef Alice Waters of Chez Panisse, and fashion designer Christina Kim.

Billy Joel, long time Hampton resident, sold out his 12th concert recently, breaking the record previously held by Bruce Springsteen for most sold out shows at Madison Square Garden in one year. Soon, the acclaimed "Piano Man" will join Sheryl Crow, Sting and Lenny Kravitz at this year's Rainforest Foundation Fund Benefit Concert in New York on May 19. The Woodstock-themed Carnegie Hall show, for which the stars will pick iconic hippie anthems from the 1968 and 1969 summers of love, is such a big deal in the Big Apple this year that the Empire State Building will glow "environmental" green as a tribute.

Nicole Kidman and beau Keith Urban strolled Southampton's Main Street on Easter Sunday stopping to acknowledge holiday greetings from local fans in front of Crescendo. Kidman is filming Noah Baumbach's new film with Jack Black and Jennifer Jason Leigh. The duo also dined at Silver's.

Hamptonite Heather Mills McCartney, the wife of Beatles superstar Sir Paul McCartney, has announced her catwalk comeback. The former model, who quit her blooming modeling career in 1993 after losing a leg in a road accident, has signed up with London's exclusive Zone model agency. Along with welcoming her back to the fashion industry, Zone boss Mike Illes praised her for her tireless charity work.

East Hampton's Star Jones Reynolds received the first ever Woman of Achievement Award last week from Dress for Success at the annual April in Paris Gala. Jones has been a long time supporter of the organization, which helps unemployed women re-enter the workforce. Among the East Enders on hand were Dyann Klein, who turned the Marriott Marquis Ballroom into the City of Lights, artist Debbie Brooks, designer Jamie Drake, Bobbi Brown, Elena Kiam, Michael Stoler, Alex Garfield, and East Hampton's Angela La Greca.

Actress Sarah Jessica Parker, of Amagansett, who portrayed the character Carrie Bradshaw in "Sex and the City," generously offered diamonds to co-stars Kim Cattrall, Cynthia Nixon and Kristin Davis at the end of the show, according to sources close to the actress. The rocks were "to honor

1,650 feet long, supported by two piers that rest in the shallow waters at each edge of the Peconic River."

Bloom doesn't remember WHAT bridge that's really a picture of. It was on the Internet. He thinks it might be a bridge in Oregon.

"Anyway, it's a beautiful bridge." Indeed it is.

On the other hand, it might be interesting to note the name of the builder of the bridge. As the Shelter Island Bridge and Tunnel Authority contracts to SIBTA, the Southfork Construction, Utilities, Maintenance, Bridging and Grading contracts to, well, figure it out.

Oh, but there is so much here. The Sterling Memorial Tunnel is named for the Earl of Stirling, the original British Governor of what is now Greenport Harbor. In the "Employment" section, you'll see photographs of seven members of the Tactical Patrol Force standing in front of what SIBTA says is the Greenport Carousel in Mitchell Park "To Protect and Serve." There are two photographs of "Then and Now," one a black and white photo of the twelve revenue collection agents from 1961, and another a full color affair of today's agents — about sixty — "posing at our annual Installation Dinner" as the caption says.

There is a section on the bumper stickers, clothing, hats, booklets and maps offered by SIBTA, and the locations on the island where you can get them, which include Tom's Lunchonette, Shelter Island Pharmacy and the Dory Restaurant.

The year 1961 saw the swearing-in of the first SIBTA Revenue Collection Agents.

"We actually made them," Bloom told me. "But we ran out of them. The whole island was in on this. And you will find lots of people on the island with SIBTA paraphernalia. Try South Ferry. There's guys with SIBTA baseball hats and grey shirts that read SIBTA ENFORCEMENT DIVISION on the back. I have a friend who is a math teacher at the high school. He has one. He says he likes to enforce division."

All profits from the sale of gifts and souvenirs get donated to the Shelter Island Ambulance Corps.

On the website, you will learn about the Traffic Cams, which were installed in June 2003 along the roadway at key traffic locations. More are going to be installed. But "At times, the cameras may be turned off or repositioned due to Department of Homeland Security anti-terrorism constraints," the website warns.

You will learn that the Greenport Toll Facility will be getting a well-deserved facelift and a new modern employee cafeteria and secured parking area. You will learn that the authority is getting a new telephone, radio, and toll-enforcement monitoring system, the contract for the construction of which has been won by the Dial Tone Search and Rescue Company, Shelter Island's only licensed telecommunications contractor. (This is real. Guess whose company this is.)

Here are some of the restrictions about what can or cannot go through the Sterling Memorial Tunnel: Haz-mat not allowed. Motorcycles allowed. Bicycles/Pedestrians not allowed. Height restriction for tunnel 14 feet 6 inches.

Here are some of the restrictions about what can or cannot go over the Sunrise Bridge: Haz-mat not allowed. Motorcycles allowed. Bicycles/Pedestrians not allowed. Height restriction: None.

There's also the fees. They are $2.50 per passenger car, with less for motorcycles and more for trucks as you might expect. You can also, at a discount, buy a resident ID sticker, for our "preferred" customers. You put them on the bumper.

"They are on lots of bumpers," Bloom said. "People display them proudly. We also have windshield stickers."

There's also a form of E-Z Pass, which SIBTA calls EZcome EZgo. This has a magnetic stripe and is available at our toll-collection administrative offices during normal business hours.

I Have Rights

The Rights of All Free Americans and How the World Gets Theirs

By Dan Rattiner

There were two interesting things in the news these last few days. One was about the killing of registered sex offenders. Somebody has looked up some of these people on the Internet and gone after a few of them. At last count, he (or she) had knocked off two of them at random in Maine. Vigilante justice.

CNN had some interesting coverage of this development. They actually interviewed a Registered Sex Offender.

"This is wrong," he said. "Sex offenders have rights." He didn't seem to mind that his face was being seen by several million people, one of whom has a rifle, probably because his face is available on the Internet on the Registered Sex Offender lists anyway. They showed him bicycling, jogging in the park, working delivering things from the back of trucks. A pleasant looking fellow. Maybe forty. Wouldn't hurt a fly. And in fact didn't.

Somewhere at CNN, I imagine there is an editor who told the staff he wanted a Registered Sex Offender to speak out about this story, but he didn't want them to find anybody who had done anything violent to anybody.

"I didn't know she was only 15," this registered sex offender said. "We were dating about a month when she told me. She didn't look 15."

"So what did you do when you found out?" the interviewer asked.

"I did the wrong thing. I considered everything. We were in love. I decided to continue to see her. Sometimes we make mistakes, you know? I was young. This was twenty years ago." His offense, which he pleaded guilty to, was Statutory Rape, the charges brought by the girl's father.

"I paid my debt. I served fifteen months. But now it's following me for all my life. And now THIS." A nod to the shooter.

If he hadn't been such a pleasant fellow, I thought he might have announced a March for Registered Sex Offender Rights. But of course, he didn't.

The other story in the news involved the twenty-six commuters that got stuck high up over the East River in gondolas on wires between Roosevelt Island and Manhattan. Something went wrong with the machinery and they were left dangling there for twelve hours, until finally, workers figured out how to rescue them. They're fine.

"People have a right not to have this happen," a survivor and resident of Roosevelt Island, told Channel Seven News.

This is America. In America, everybody has rights. A right to this and a right to that. President Bush went to war in Iraq to give the Iraqi people their rights. He was so happy when they came out to vote. It proved that they wanted rights even if they didn't know it. We have rights to an education, to health care, to freedom from want, to drive an SUV of your choice, to not have a lot of noise living by the airport, to not be forced to eat broccoli.

> Even the deer have Rights, except of course if they eat up all your shrubbery. Then you shoot them. Your shrubbery has rights.

Even animals have rights. People have marched for animal rights. Here in the Hamptons, groups have spared circus elephants from having to perform under the big top in Southampton. They demonstrated for Elephant Rights and got them. Even the deer have rights, except of course if they eat up all your shrubbery. Then you shoot them. Your shrubbery has rights. And it trumps the deer rights, under certain circumstances.

And of course, Victims have Rights. Especially having Rights are Victims of Sex Predators and Rapists, although arguably the Victims of Statutory Rape Perpetrators ought to have the Rights to Put their Violators in Jail, but not to have the crime follow them for the Rest of the Perp's life or get shot by a Vigilante. Especially if they had been in love. That's Registered Sex Offender Rights, which CNN hauled up the flagpole to see if anybody would salute.

So who decides on who gets these Rights? Well WE do. All of us. And those of us who might grumble about one particular Right or another ought to get our heads on straight because people who live in glass houses shouldn't throw stones. Object to your neighbor's choice of rights. And he'll object to yours.

And so EVERYTHING is now a right. We have a right to not trip on a crack in a sidewalk, a right not to get hit on the head with a golf ball, a right to not have to be yelled at, a right not to have to be offended by somebody with a poor attitude. And if our requests for these rights are not honored, we sue, and we are awarded our rights in cash by a jury of our peers, all of whom know that if they deny somebody else rights, they can look forward to having somebody else deny their rights. So much for an impartial jury.

I might add that the WE who gets to decide upon these rights are limited to those of us here in the USA. We have the best country. So we get to tell the French about what rights they ought to have, and we march so the Russians get their rights. And we get to tell the Eskimos they have rights, which they might not otherwise have thought they had. Except that we have to tell them, or warn them, that they have to respect the polar bears rights and the penguins rights, if they happen to stumble upon a penguin. And we certainly have to give the environment its rights. Or whatever rights the environment ought to have so long as their rights don't interfere with, say, shopping, shipping, or fast food or flying in airplanes or something.

America. A free country. With rights. I've decided I have the Right to write and publish this. It's my right to free speech. Wanna make something of it? •

NO EXCEPTIONS!

You get the idea. Have fun on the site.

But what NOBODY expected was the lawsuit. You can mail things to SIBTA, at Box 577, Shelter Island Heights NY 11965. It's right there on the website. And it's a real p.o. box.

One day, Bloom went down to the P.O. and they told him there was a certified letter for the legal department of the Shelter Island Bridge and Tunnel Authority. It was from the Port Authority of New York.

"It is a cease and desist demand," Bloom said. "They say they are the only agency allowed to collect tolls in the New York-New Jersey area. We are collecting tolls illegally. They said the use in our logo of the colors purple and orange will confuse people into believing we were involved with EZ Pass, which we are not, and that we should cease using those colors. And they said we had no right to build a bridge or tunnel. I thought this must be a joke. But I called and it isn't. I asked them if they recognized that the tunnel pictured on our site was THEIR tunnel and they said they did not. These are thousand dollar an hour people. They don't look at tunnels."

Bloom paused.

"I don't know what we are going to do at this point. I mean, the enabling legislation founding the Shelter Island Bridge and Tunnel Authority was signed into law by Governor Nelson A. Rockefeller on July 31, 1961. The whole document is reprinted right there on the website." •

African Journey

Lions, Leopards, Cheetahs, Giraffes, Elephants, Hippos and Us

By Dan Rattiner

When I arrived back at JFK from South Africa, I was standing in line at US Customs when my Blackberry, which had been silent for all these past weeks, sprang back to life. There were suddenly seventeen messages. Here was the most interesting of them. It was from Mattituck, from a physician's secretary.

"Dan, please call Dr. So-and-So back. It's a personal matter."

I called.

"Oh hi," he said. "I knew you were on safari in Botswana. But there was this news item in Botswana about a guy who got eaten by a crocodile. Happened last week while you were there. I wondered if it was you. It was on Yahoo."

Nice. No, it hadn't been me. But we'd heard about it. A guy in a rowboat poked it in the eye with a long stick. Dumb.

Yes, the animals can be dangerous. But honestly, though I was pretty frightened about the idea before I went to Africa, I don't feel that way about it now at all. Here was the stereotype. You're walking carefully along through the jungle at night and up in a tree is a leopard, just waiting, licking his chops. He springs, and it's all over in a second.

Here's reality in Africa. Yes, there is a predator up in a tree. But he's not looking for you. He's looking for an impala or a wildebeest to come walking by. He'll shy from a fight with a human. If he sees you before you see him, he'll hold perfectly still and hope you don't notice. Actually, he'll probably hope you don't get the impala before he does. He thinks of humans as fellow predators.

So, the thing is, if you walk along in perfect confidence, you'll be fine. Trouble happens when you might accidentally step on something sleeping or walk between a mother on one side of the trail and her cubs on the other. Get it? You'd just politely back away — without turning your back. Sorry about that.

I might add that there is a general rule at

RUN THE POTATOHAMPTON ON SUNDAY MAY 28

By Dan Rattiner

This is the time of the year when Dan's Papers begins to plan some of our annual summer events. One of them is the annual Dan's Papers Potatohampton Minithon, an event which takes place in late May. This year will be the twenty-eighth running of the Minithon. (It's twenty-eight if you count the years on your fingers. There was the year, 1981, when all the roads were flooded and on the advice of the police, but over the objections of runners who loudly announced they could splash through the floods, we had to cancel. So really this is the twenty-seventh running.)

Anyway, I thought it might be of some interest to you to compare this twenty-eighth year with the first year, in terms of planning. It's a whole new world out there. And it ain't as easy as it was.

That first year, we simply put an announcement in the newspaper two weeks before that we would have a 10K run on the Sunday morning of Memorial Day weekend, and we put some posters around the town and everybody showed up. Where they showed up was in the shopping center parking lot where Kmart is today. It's a public lot, I figured. No reason why people can't assemble. We had bridge tables and volunteers to write down the names and phone numbers of everybody who was running. And we gave everybody a map. I had driven in my car for approximately 6.3 miles because I had figured out that is how far 10k was.

The route I laid out began at Snake Hollow Road. We had asked the police department to be on hand and they said they would help. They stopped traffic briefly when all the runners came out onto Snake Hollow. And then we fired a gun, and everybody was off, heading north. The route took the runners up to Mitchell Lane, then north to Scuttlehole, then safari camps that you don't go walking around, particularly at night, without a guide with a flashlight to lead the way. "Guests" as they are referred to, are not trained in all of the above. So you don't know what they'll do. The guests are therefore more dangerous than the animals, thank you.

I learned all this, by the way, after three weeks of the experience of going out with guides on daily safaris and watching them at work, and also by asking them such questions as Are You Ever Scared? Or How Does This All Work with the Animals So you Don't Get Eaten? I also observed that the first thing a guide does is note how an animal is feeling. "Those lions are very relaxed." "I think the big bull elephant is going to show up. Look at how excited all the females are." Predators are playful or tired or satiated or hungry or worried or looking for sex or feeling threatened or just mellow. They very rarely rise to anger. So much for stereotypes.

Backing into Daddy

Once, as we were bumping along a trail in an open Land Rover looking for wild animals, this mundane thought occurred to me — we're probably safer here than we are driving on the Long Island Expressway. And you know what? We were.

Obviously, we couldn't visit all of Africa in three weeks. Where we did go was the part of Africa with the highest ratio of wild animals to people. Lots of animals. Few people. This was roughly the country of Botswana, with a bit of Zambia to the north and South Africa to the south, which is mostly flat land savannah, desert, "bush" and delta. There's tall grass, scrub trees, a few areas of woods, several rivers and for a thousand miles or more, no fences. And animals everywhere. You smell flowers, see fantastically colorful birds, and at night see a great black dome of sky pierced by the brightest stars imaginable. The air is pure. Occasionally you will hear the roar of a lion. Or the chatter of baboons.

I was trying to explain this to some friends. What we do when we "go on safari" is take pictures from an open car, occasionally stopping along the way to quietly observe what is going on unnoticed. You don't get out of the car. The driver is a guide who explains things. He has a loaded rifle, stowed somewhere in the car but quickly available. Animals are predictable. Ninety-nine percent of the time anyway. There's always the possibility of something not going the way you expect. And, I might add, that is true for the Long Island Expressway, too.

Dawn over Zambia

So here are some stories about our experiences on this trip.

We did see a leopard up a tree. He was about a hundred yards off the road in a tree in an open field, and he was up there asleep, his great paws hanging down both sides of a limb. This was while we were on a game drive out of an incredibly posh resort known as Singita in northern South Africa. Why was he up there? Behind him, also in the tree but on another branch, was his kill — a dead impala (the African version of a deer) — also hanging down. Apparently he had dragged it up there. It was his. And he'd stay nearby so nobody else would get it until he was ready to eat it.

Jump Aboard the Hampton Jitney for a Little Entertainment and More

By Dan Rattiner

One of the best things to ever have happened to the Hamptons is the Hampton Jitney. Before its arrival on the scene 32 years ago, the only real way to get out here involving public transportation was the Long Island Rail Road. The railroad was pretty much of a mess at the time. It was losing money, there were few trains, they were dirty and they rarely ran on time. There was no bus service to the Hamptons.

When many communities get to a certain size, however, it makes economic sense for a bus company to come in. At the time, the Hamptons certainly did have a wealthy component to it. Besides that, though, it was a pretty regular place with fishing and farming predominant. One would have thought a regular bus service would come on the scene. A Greyhound or Trailways or something. Instead, we got Hampton Jitney. People would be able to come to the Hamptons in style, aboard a luxurious motor coach with captain's seats, free food and drink on board, stewards and stewardesses to serve them, and, in the back, a rest room. It would always be right on time. And, it might be coincidence, but beginning with the arrival of the Jitney this place known as the "Hamptons" as both a concept and a destination, vaulted into the front ranks of American resorts. It has remained there to this day. I've often wondered if this luxurious way of getting here has been a major reason for that to have come about.

There have been only minor changes in this remarkable service during these years. Computerized reservations have been put in. Uniforms have appeared. A recorded announcement over an onboard TV system has been put in to describe everything you need to know about the service. They've had to deal with cell phones. (Policy decided upon was one call for three minutes maximum and no ringers on.) And recently they've added a

REACTIONS TO THE UPCOMING NATIONWIDE STRIKE

By Chris Messinger

As the week of April 3 came to a close, the back and forth debate on increasing border security, creating a guest-worker program and developing a system through which illegal immigrants already in the country could gain legal status, ended at a standstill, leaving the fate of a bill proposed by Senators Ted Kennedy and John McCain and the fate of more than 11 million undocumented immigrants in limbo.

The organization known as "Latino Movement USA" announced two weeks ago their proposed reactions if an agreement supporting the legalization of the illegal immigrants was not reached. A reaction that would include a May 1 boycott, intended to demonstrate the illegal immigrants' influence and power.

In a conference call last week held by the Long Island Immigration Alliance and Isabel Sepulveda-de Scanlon of "Ola," the topic at hand was legislative reform and the prospects of the May 1 boycott. The alliance determined that they would organize "a calling day" to the Senators to make sure the Senators remain attentive to the issue. April 25th was chosen as the official "calling day" and the idea was to call in support of Senators McCain and Kennedy's immigration bill. May 1 is around the corner. The day is intended to be peaceful, yet send a powerful message. The hope is that illegal immigrants will not go to work, and not contribute in any way to the country's economy, including no transportation and food being used or purchased. This idea has received much support in our communities, but some are reluctant. "I'm afraid of losing my job, but I'm torn, because I want to contribute, I want to be a part of it." Those were the words of one undocumented immigrant who works for a wireless Internet capability for those who want to access their e-mail on their laptops.

As a regular rider, I've enjoyed all of the above. But one of the most interesting things has been the wonderfully different approaches taken to the job by the various attendants on board. Some do it by the book. Others inject something of their personality into the job. As these attendants (they are no longer called stewards and stewardesses) interact with the passengers only briefly at the start of the trip, management gives them a little more latitude than you might find, say, on an aircraft.

There was Debbie Kins, for example. She worked at the Jitney for ten years, and when she finally retired, some of the regular passengers at the Jitney, who had become friends with her, threw her a party. So after that, she came back and worked for another five years. Debbie wore her heart on her sleeve. She cared about you. And she told you all about her. Everyone loved her.

I could probably mention the different styles of twenty different attendants in this little story. I think that everybody who takes on this job — it is a well paying job — does it to the best of their ability. They go through a training procedure. Make the announcement at the start of the trip — about holding onto the handrails when you go down the aisle, about destinations, the overhead compartments, the escape hatches, the windows and the fares and how they will be collected. Then they serve the snacks and the drinks, then collect the fares.

At the present time, perhaps the most professionally turned out attendant is Stefan Szombathelyi. Stefan is an attendant on the upper class Ambassador Service and has the demeanor of a Presidential Aide. Some day he may be a Presidential Aide, although not in this country. Stefan will be returning to his native Slovakia this November to study International Relations. In the meantime, you want him and he's there. He could be a steward on a cruise liner.

Then there is the Rasheem and Wayne Show. It's a routine. And it starts out on an odd foot. The attendant, a delightful young man with a Chris Rock smile, gets up to talk, but the first person who talks is the driver.

"Hey, everybody, my name is Wayne, and I'm your driver, and up there in the front next to me you see my buddy, Rasheem. Say good morning, Rasheem. Rasheem says 'good morning.' Now everybody say good morning back."

Rasheem picks up the beat. In the dashboard mirror, you can see, at the wheel, Wayne, an army hat on his head and wrap around sunglasses framing his face. And there's Rasheem. Mr. Entertainment.

"I'm the nice guy Wayne was telling you about," he says. "Hope you enjoy your ride. I'll tell you about the safety features on this bus. First of all, there is Wayne and me. We're both CPR certified and safety experts, so if you need us, here we are." He talks about the overhead hatches and the window exits. He talks about the fares. "Now we have a senior discount fare, but I don't see any on this bus, anyway. So that's that. (Hoots from the riders.) Okay, so tell me if you're over sixty."

The talk goes on for another five minutes. Then it's over.

"Rasheem will be serving refreshments now, and then will collect the fares," Wayne says.

"Give me all your money," Rasheem says happily.

Two hours later, with everyone long since settled down for the trip, we arrive at my destination in Manhattan. Getting off, I asked Wayne what Rasheem's story was. Wayne's story seemed clear enough. He was playing John Wayne. A careful John Wayne charged with the safe delivery of a large group of bus passengers.

"Rasheem wants to be a sportscaster," he said.

"Thanks for the nice ride," I tell Wayne, which is what it was. Rasheem is down on the side of the bus sliding luggage out, bantering with the passengers he is helping. Somebody is going to give this guy a TV job. I hope not too soon. He's got his own gig on this bus just now and his fans await the next segment of the Rasheem and Wayne Show.

You never know who you are going to get. You will get fifteen minutes of somebody — maybe Sam from New Orleans — and then you will get an hour and forty five minutes of what the video proclaims, correctly, is the "rolling oasis of tranquility." It's worth the price. •

Dealing With the New Law in Downtown Southampton About Offices

By David Lion Rattiner

Just about everywhere these days is a bank where you can walk inside, order a hot latte or cappuccino, then deposit your weekly paycheck. It has become normal to get coffee in a bank, even though this is a new form of business, a combination business, that has been around for the past four years.

But we welcome coffee in banks. Why? Because we like coffee and we like money, so it would seem only natural to combine the two. It is the American way.

In Southampton, the local government is working on legislation that will make it even more difficult for a business to open. The idea is simple: Don't allow a business to open a storefront on Main Street unless it is a retail store or restaurant. This means that if you want to open up a banking center, a lawyer's office or a yoga studio, you are out of luck. The legislation says that you have to open up those businesses in the upper floors of the buildings in Southampton.

The logic to this idea is that it will promote more foot traffic on the streets, which will bring more business for everyone, which is good. The only problem with it is that there are a lot of empty storefronts in Southampton, mainly because of the high cost of leasing one of the storefronts there. Adding another hurdle for entrepreneurs to jump over may keep those storefronts empty longer. What's an entrepreneur to do?

Well, let's go back to banks and coffee. These two businesses have combined not just because bank owners and coffee shop owners are buddies, but because combining the two makes paying for rent a little bit easier on both sides. Why not bring this concept to the streets of Southampton? Maybe there is a solution where everyone can win. Where there will be foot traffic as well as a real estate shop. All you would have to do is make it a combo business.

THANKS FOR CARING BUT NO THANKS

By Grant MacMurray

This year, in Southampton, there was a twist to the Great East End Clean-up (the sixteenth annual since that heady eco-conscious time and banner year of Earth Day 1990 or as my generation refer to it, the Pre-Summer of Love and Civic Responsibility): the town did not provide Dumpsters. Judy McCleery. recycling coordinator with the town's Waste Management Division, explained the absence in a pre-cleanup media spin saying, "People were filling the Dumpsters with household trash..." adding, "The point is to get out there and clean up beaches, woods, town lands. . .not household trash or clutter from basements." This specification, even in the face of what is, after all, a volunteer event, seems indicative of the increasingly troubled world of Waste Removal. Long Island generates some 3.7 million tons of garbage per year, 30 percent of which is removed by truck to be dumped elsewhere. One would think that with this staggering amount of waste, those trying to entice the jaded public back to doing their part for old Mother Earth might go the distance to procure the Town dumpsters for John Q. Six-Pack (whose six-pack-holders, thank God are too big for the lovely Piping Plover to get her precious neck caught in). This year, however, it almost seemed that scales were tipped against the eco-conscious, the foremost outrage being a five dollar charge for the rental of garbage spikes (albeit the money was refunded for spikes returned in good condition).

Another facet of this supposedly egalitarian humanistic event was a mandatory registration. "Otherwise," said Ms. McCleery, people [would] think it [was] just a free-for-all at the town's four recycling centers." While the vision of people being whipped up into some sort of orgiastic recycling frenzy makes my

Think about it, entrepreneurs. Don't let a little law stop you from earning your livelihood on one of the most prestigious streets in America. Get creative, it's how you got to where you are in the first place. Turn your non-retail/non-restaurant business into a certified retail/restaurant business, then sprinkle a little lawyer office on top. If you do this, you get the best of both worlds.

Imagine walking down Main Street and then walking into a shop called Hamptons Real Estate Coffee. In the window you would see people sitting down at tables, drinking lattes and chatting away with their friends or family. But unbeknownst to you would be that the majority of the people in there that are talking with people are real estate agents. If you wanted to get some coffee at Hamptons Real Estate Coffee, you could do that as often as you would like. Part of the experience, however, would be that the person who is taking your money for your coffee will also be a licensed real estate agent. And, if you wish, they'd tell you all about the new homes that are on the market that you and your family could enjoy. Of course, if you wanted to talk even further about it, you could chat right there over your cup of Joe. This would make a particularly good marriage of business, because very often, real estate agents meet their clients for coffee when they first meet. Having the coffee shop right there saves you both a trip.

It's not just real estate and coffee that could make out like a couple of bandits by combining their businesses. A banking center and a high end clothing boutique would also work on Main Street in Southampton. After all, paying $700 for a paper thin summer skirt might get you into some financial trouble. You may need to take out a loan to purchase those $900 blue jeans. Everybody has been in one of those high end clothing boutiques and may not have had the cash on hand to pay for something that they really wanted. Certainly, they could always put it on a credit card, but the really super cool, super hip, super unique clothing boutique often doesn't take American Express and a quick visit to the ATM right across the room could make things easier for everybody.

So you see, the new storefront law may not be that bad; in fact, it could make things better. A divorce lawyer could open up in the same shop right on Main Street in Southampton with a liquor store. Now you're getting the picture. Of course, combining a China shop with a day care center might not be such a good idea, but hey, not all businesses work.

Puritanical Hackles stand up, what, may I be so bold to ask, happened to the idea of Civic Pride, not to mention Zeal? If someone, even in a moment of madness, gets the wild notion to pick up a bleached-out can of Bud, should we not salute his passion, rather than making him register and performing (I can only speculate) an extensive background check?

Now, please understand that I am a foremost lover of Long Island's Beaches. I am downright snobbish when it comes to their natural beauty (I find pink beaches to be incredibly tacky, and think the sand of L.A.'s questionable Manhattan Beach is good only for filling Upper East Side sand boxes). We deserve good beaches; however, we are also exceedingly lazy. Is it not in my province to pick up a can I find lying on street, beach, or where I threw it last night, if the mood should strike? I ask you, should I be punished for my fleeting civic whims, or, should I be rewarded for them (yes, even at the town's expense) with a plethora of Dumpsters in which to toss said can (Public Urinals are lacking too but that is a subject for another day.) The Town of Southampton apparently does not agree.

Somewhere along the line, the passing whimsy of every man to, sort of, be a good citizen, has been thwarted by those who, rightly or wrongly, have made it their business to be professionally good. While we applaud your staying power, and would (if we could get off the couch) pat you on the pack, please know that we are not, like yourselves, stoic. We're weak. So if, you want us in on the gig, if you want us, really want us, to get into the recycling thing in a major way...make it easy. At least, as easy (not to say as fun) as littering used to be.

Gail Sheehy Talks About the Passions of Women in Middle Age

By Julia Nasser

"We thank the Goddess for Gail Sheehy," says a voice from a modest podium at Canio's Books in Sag Harbor, where a record number have gathered on this drizzly Saturday in what T.S. Eliot called the cruelest month, to meet the woman who has dared to speak of the unspeakable: Sex and the middle-aged woman.

The room is crowded and smells of high-end perfumes. Those who refused to be turned away at the door are packed in, some up against the wall, others on tiptoes, happily waiting. In a few minutes, Gail Sheehy, best-selling author, cultural observer and "America's emotional tour guide," will read from her latest book, Sex and the Seasoned Woman: Pursuing the Passionate Life.

The rest of us, after prodding, have been led in through the back door with a secretive nod, as if we're the last lucky few admitted into some secret society. And we have, in a way. This is, in fact, a room full of seasoned women.

Gail Sheehy, a contributing editor to Vanity Fair since 1984, recently won the Washington Journalism Review Award for Best Magazine Writer in America. Her original landmark work, Passages, was named one of the ten most influential books of our time by A Library of Congress survey and remained on The New York Times bestseller list for more than three years. In other recent bestsellers, New Passages and Understanding Men's Passages, Sheehy mapped out a completely new frontier - Second Adulthood. In The Silent Passage, she broke the obsolete myths surrounding menopause and opened a dialogue vital to maturing women's health. Recently, she culminated a decade of Hillary-observing with the biography, Hillary's Choice.

For Sex and the Seasoned Woman, her fifteenth book, Sheehy traveled across the country, speaking with women from their 40s to their 90s about sex, dating, new dreams, divorce, remarriage, spiritual growth, and

ON THE SAG HARBOR AUTHOR HOUSE TOUR

By Debbie Tuma

Despite the raw wind and rain last Saturday afternoon, I went out on a Sag Harbor House tour to see where all the famous writers lived. I've lived in Sag Harbor for ten years and I had seen these writers around the village, but, like many people, didn't really know.

"We're limiting this tour to only 15 people, because we want to respect their privacy and not intrude on their homes," said Elise Goodheart, who had helped to organize this tour for the John Steinbeck Committee, which was founded to keep this great writer's memory alive. She said this tour was part of a day-long fundraiser, which also included a screening of The Grapes of Wrath, from Steinbeck's book, and a dinner at the American Hotel. Proceeds were going to John Steinbeck Pierson High School writing awards and scholarships.

About a year ago, the John Steinbeck Memorial Trust held a contest open to artists, who created images of him, and the winning bust of Steinbeck is immortalized in the John Jermain Library. The Steinbeck Committee is also compiling oral histories of people who knew Steinbeck during his Sag Harbor years, and collecting any Steinbeck-related archives from the community.

We were following our guide, author Mark Ciabattari, who has written three books of fiction and lives in Sag Harbor with his author wife, Jane. As he guided us down Glover Street, toward the homes of three famous writers who have died, he said, "For a little village of only a few thousand people, it is amazing how many famous writers live or have lived here." This was only the fourth "Literary Tour of Writer's Homes," that Ciabattari, who is also a cultural historian, has given.

He led us to the home of the late Betty Friedan, who had been a visible figure, riding seeking ways to live more passionately in the second half of their lives.

It has long been assumed that a woman's "sexual pilot light" is extinguished at the onset of menopause – a point at which any respectable woman obediently surrenders to a world of dulling hair, sagging breasts, sweater sets and shriveling sex organs and, in the words of the author, accepts her role as "on-call grandma."

It is uniquely American to imagine that all things steamy and sexual exist within the comfortable realms of supple breasts and virile stallions. Only would a puritanical-based society believe that we trade our sex drive, complacently, for a senior citizen discount at the movies and a set of knitting needles. Sheehy's new book breaks through these myths and taboos.

As her research proves, there is a whole generation of boomers who are not going to give up the pleasures of touching or being touched for "some hobby utilizing yarn."

The stories of the women Sheehy brings to life tell us otherwise – from Peggy, the flaming redhead with the infectious laugh, to the ninety five-year-old Catherine, who has found passion and companionship in a nursing home in Florida. Vibrators, Sheehy reports, are especially big in the conservative South, where women who routinely attend church with their husbands also congregate for "Passion Parties," which may well be, Sheehy claims, "the Tupperware Party of the new millennium." For many women, Internet dating has offered "a candy jar of men." She tells stories of the "Pilot Light Lover" who "reignites a midlife woman's capacity for love and sex."

But pursuing passion, she reminds us, is a conscious choice, rather than merely a developmental stage. It's more than just growing older, it's about daring to pursue.

"I'm writing about the real engine of life force, which is passion," says Gail Sheehy, who is poised and formidable at 5' 2" and clad in a sensual orange blazer.

"Now this passion doesn't have to be sexual," she explains. While some of the women in these pages have been swept away by that "pilot-light lover," others have found the same zest for life through learning the Tango, a trip to Santa Fe, flying lessons, hiking or spiritual awakenings. My personal favorite was the downtrodden widow who found inspiration from voice lessons, admitting she had always dreamt of being a back up singer for Stevie Wonder.

"For if you're ignited, you will attract with that life force. For a long time, no one could imagine that anything worth mentioning happened after 50," says Sheehy in a voice that carries even into the back stacks. "But for an inspired and impassioned woman, the decades after 50 will be the most fulfilling."

Gail reads: "A seasoned woman is spicy. She has been marinated in life experience." Like a complex wine, she can be alternately sweet, tart, sparkling and mellow. She is both maternal and playful. Allured, alluring and resourceful. She is less likely to have an agenda than a younger woman – no biological clock tick-tocking beside her lover's bed, no campaign to lead her to the altar, no rescue fantasies. A seasoned woman knows who she is."

"And what makes a seasoned woman? Time."

After the Tryout twenties, Turbulent thirties and the Forlorn forties, the modern woman is bursting into new territory, into a time when she can make choices free of guilt. According to Sheehy, a woman at 50 is at the apex of adult life – the Age of Mastery. She stands at the mountaintop of her lifespan, with a 360-degree view of her life. She is ripe (a supple peach on the cover of her recently published book is an obvious correlative).

The social definitions of age and sex have shifted with the force of tectonic plates. An intimate revolution is taking place under our noses. For the tsunami of female baby boomers pushing past 50 (those who fought for the sexual revolution with "free love" picket signs and burning bras) – it is time to open up, to embrace a second adulthood and enter a period of reawakening.

So here I am, at a mere 24 years old, and admittedly feeling a bit out of place, crouched in the back, peering between two bookcases just to get a glimpse of what I have to look forward to. My 50s. Who'd a thought?

west to Hayground, south to the Montauk Highway (where the police held up traffic so the race would cross) then south down Newlight to Paul's Lane, east to Halsey and then up Halsey to a finish line at Dan's Papers.

We had a trophy for the winner. And we had a red ribbon for second place and a white ribbon for third place. Those were the only prizes that we offered.

You will note that the race crossed the Montauk Highway. You will note also that on two occasions, the race crossed the Long Island Rail Road tracks, which, after I announced the departure time of the race, which was 9:30 a.m., I discovered absolutely coincided with an eastbound train. How I dealt with it was to call the railroad and asked them to slow the train down and honk the horn repeatedly while they went through (they did), and on the map, put our one rule, which was that if you got to the tracks and there was a train coming, you were to stop and jog in place until it passed.

I will say I was deeply indebted to the police department on the day of that first race. They simply stopped traffic. I was at the crossing point, which was by Corrigan's Service Station. They held up traffic for about four minutes as the first few hundred runners came through. Then, reluctantly, they let the Montauk Highway traffic start up again in both directions. I don't think it occurred to anybody that there would be stragglers at the tail end of the race. They'd have to make their way across the highway on their own there.

Now that was, in a nutshell, it, for the first race. What we did not have were water stops, different categories of runners (such as men and women), an admission cost to cover any expenses or any portopotties. We also didn't have a 10K. It seemed to matter a great deal to the 500 runners after the race was over that this was not exactly 10k. I wasn't quite sure why that was. My initial reaction was they were a bunch of nut cases. Who knew about personal bests in 1976?

The first race was won in 29 minutes and 58 seconds by a man who had been on the French Olympic Team. He said it was the best time he had ever run a 10K in. And indeed, it is a terrific time. Of course, it was only 9.6K.

But nobody knew that until later.

Well, now we have all that stuff. And so we come to this year.

First of all, it's not like two weeks before Memorial Day we say "let's put an ad in the paper," anymore. Today you need an event planner. We had Linda Shapiro do it beginning around 1990, and last year the staff of Dan's Papers did it.

There are official forms to fill out months in advance. The application to hold an event with the Town of Southampton runs to 5 pages of questions. We have to post a bond. We have to indemnify them from all insurance obligations. We are putting together a somewhat different race this year, so we need the permission of the Southampton Town Board, and the nod from the Southampton Town Police, the Bridgehampton Fire Department, the Bridgehampton Ambulance Corps, the Southampton Town Recreation Department and so forth and so on.

And so this past Tuesday night we were approved to have our race. We will have our starting line just south of the Bridgehampton Monument on Ocean Road. (We've had it here for the last five years.) The route will go for 5K not 10K, and it will head south, away from the center of town, down Ocean Road to Paul's Lane, right on Paul's to Halsey, right on Halsey to Hildreth, right on Hildreth back to Ocean and then up Ocean to a finish line on the west side of the road.The date will be Sunday morning early, at 9 a.m., May 27. Our thinking is that with a 5K rather than a 10K we will have more people show up on race day. And by 9:30 the whole thing will be over, even the strag-

Frank McCourt
Author

By Christian McLean

What is it about the Irish that gives them the uncanny ability to turn depression, alcoholism, poverty, violence, and death into some of the finest words ever put to paper? It grows from mythology and an oral tradition similar to the Greeks and the Romans, but as W.B. Yeats says, "Irish folklore... have made their work literature rather than science... they have caught the very voice of the people, the very pulse of life." This pulse is continued through the centuries by writers like Lady Augusta Gregory, James Joyce, Samuel Beckett, Flan O'Brien, and for the past ten years, Frank McCourt. But to categorize McCourt as Irish is to do a disservice to America. Out of his seventy-odd years of life, he, like Joyce and Beckett, has only spent a fraction of them in Ireland. In fact, for those not among the almost three million who own a copy of his Pulitzer Prize winning memoir, Angela's Ashes, McCourt was actually born in Brooklyn.

The stock market had already crashed, America had fallen into poverty and the country was dry. Life in Brooklyn was like that across the United States — horrendous. McCourt's parents, both Irish immigrants, met at a Thanksgiving party, got to talking and one thing led to another or, as Frank puts it, "there was bound to be a knee-trembler." Angela Sheehan became pregnant and she and Malachy McCourt were married four months later under the pressure of Angela's large forceful cousins, Delia and Philomena. Frank was born that August.

Until the age of four he lived in a two room flat on Brooklyn's Classon Avenue with his parents, his brother Malachy (a year younger), the twins, Oliver and Eugene (three years younger), and sister Margaret (who died at seven months of age). The family battled poverty. His father rarely held a job and was consumed by an addiction to alcohol, but there is something about him and his moments with his children that is beautiful and pure. His mother attempted to raise the McCourt children with barely any means and relied on the generosity of local shop owners to provide food for the children.

The 18th Amendment was rescinded and FDR promised more jobs, but it was too late for the McCourts. After the death of Margaret, Delia and Philomena packed their cousin and her family onto a ship and sent them back to Ireland in hopes that they would find support from Angela and Malachy's families. But as Frank says in the opening line of the book, "My father and mother should have stayed in New York." Things in Ireland became worse. Without a source of income the family settled in Limerick. Although surrounded by Angela's family, the McCourts were not exactly accepted amongst their own family. To make matters worse, Oliver and Eugene died within the first years of being in Ireland. The family was at its breaking point.

What is it about the Irish that gives them the uncanny ability to turn depression, alcoholism, poverty, violence, and death into some of the finest words ever put to paper?

Somehow, through a stunning way with words, subtlety and style, McCourt creates moments of light and of laughter among these hard times. It echoes of Roddy Doyle's Paddy Clark Ha, Ha, Ha in its ability to capture the perception of a child; unable to digest adult-speak, but grasping the intonations of constant disapproval and contempt. There are simple moments of childhood joy where Frank's father would tell him stories of the great Irish hero Cuchulain and the young Francis internalized it as his story, a story only told by his father to him. Moments like this are wonderful snapshots of spiritual fulfillment in a time when material fulfillment was constantly fleeting. Angela's Ashes continues through peaks and valleys (seemingly more valleys than peaks); the birth of his brothers, Michael and Alphonsus; the desertion of his father; and Frank's eventual return to America at the age of 19.

After a few odd jobs, including janitor at the Biltmore Hotel and a stint in the Army training dogs, McCourt, despite lacking a high school diploma, was accepted at New York University. Soon after he became a teacher and for the next three decades taught English and writing at the McKee Vocational School in Staten Island, Seward Park High School in the Lower East Side, and spent the final 17 years at the prestigious Stuyvesant High School.

Three years later his brother Malachy followed suit and moved to America, followed by Michael four years after that and finally his mother and his youngest brother Alphonsus came for a three week Christmas vacation in 1959 and stayed.

He married his first wife and the two stayed together for 19 years until their divorce. They had a daughter together, named Maggie. The marriage wasn't exactly a happy one. And when he struggled at home, he claims that "going into the classroom for [him] was an escape from the world — and women." But he didn't escape women forever. In 1989, McCourt was introduced to his sec-her bike around Sag Harbor until her death in February. Her best-selling book, The Feminine Mystique, written in 1953, made her one of the pioneers of the Feminist Movement, along with Simone de Beauvoir, who wrote The Second Sex, and for a while, lived across the street from Friedan.

Explaining how the two women were good friends, Ciabattari talked about how, as a port town and whaling village, Sag Harbor has always attracted "adventurous men, who went out to sea for years at a time, and fiercely independent women, who stayed at home raising the children, and bonding with their fellow women friends." Pointing out the many "widow's walks" on the old rooftops, he added that behind Friedan's house, on this historic street, there were shipbuilding and rope factories.

"At the beginning of the book Moby Dick, Melville wrote of docking in Sag Harbor," said Ciabattari.

Also on Glover Street, we came to the home of the late author Nelson Algren, of Chicago, who wrote, The Man With A Golden Arm, about a junkie. This book later became a movie with Frank Sinatra. Algren also wrote for the Chicago newspapers, about crooked cops and sordid characters in this city, where he knew Studs Turkle. He moved to Sag Harbor in the early 1980s and died a few years later.

We walked up to Main Street, past Canio's Books, where the tour had started, past the beautiful Otter Pond, at the entrance of the village, and down a small side street. It seems like many writers seem to live near each other, and this is the case with author E.L. Doctorow and playwright Joe Pintauro, who happen to live across the street from each other, in big, old houses.

Ciabattari explained how both these men's writing was influenced by the East End area. He said one of Pintauro's most popular productions was his dramatization of Peter Matthiessen's book, The Baymen, about the lifestyle of these local net fishermen. And, as for E.L. Doctorow, in his book, Billy Bathgate, he wrote about prohibition, and sensed his characters here.

"Sag Harbor and the whole Peconic Bay was a big bootlegging area," Ciabattari said. "Ships would come from California and race to hidden coves here."

As the skies darkened, and rain pelted down, we kept walking down a long point of land, along the Sag Harbor Cove, and almost to the end, we passed a house with a sign that read, "East of Eden," which was the name of one of Steinbeck's books. Just further down, we came to the modest, waterfront cottage that John Steinbeck rented in 1955 and then bought, with his wife Elaine. He lived here until his death in 1968, and he wrote Travels With Charlie here in 1961, and got the Nobel Prize for this in 1963. He also wrote The Winter of Our Discontent, a novel about Sag Harbor, here. The small gray cottage with white shutters was surrounded by a wide green lawn and hedges, and at one end of the property was a little gazebo, facing the sea.

"This was John Steinbeck's writing studio, where he spent many hours," said Ciabattari. "He also had a pier for his boat, which he almost lost in a hurricane."

One member of our group, Charles Magistro, of Springs, said, "It's so interesting seeing this tour, where history comes alive. Just thinking about walking down this little dirt road where John Steinbeck walked his dog, Charlie, is amazing."

Looking at Steinbeck's gazebo, from the road where we stood, Nancy Preone, of North Haven, said, "It's really interesting to see that

We also saw a whole family of elephants suddenly become animated when they realized that daddy was on his way home. This was at another fabulous resort in South Africa called Leopard Hills.

We had come upon this herd and we'd stopped the car to watch them. The herd consisted of three grown females, two adolescent males, and three baby elephants, all grazing on grass and tree leaves. They were just standing around, eating. And they ignored our car. So we stayed still.

But then, the females began to get animated, and their behavior animated the children. There was pushing and shoving, flapping of ears and slapping of trunks — we're talking twenty thousand pounds of elephants here — and then through the trees and brush, head and shoulders taller than anybody else — came daddy.

In whispers, our guide explained what was going on. The big bull was in charge of a whole territory. He had many families in it. So when he showed up it was a big deal. He came in and trumpeted and the females came over and began rubbing up against him. Then the kids came over. Pretty soon they were all pressed in around dad. The absolutely most amazing thing was that the females were pushing their behinds up against his sides — as in — take me, no take me. I have a picture of this.

Also at Leopard Hills, we watched a whole story involving some particular lions unfold, and this included watching two lions mate. As with the elephants, the male lions have their own ideas about territory that is theirs. It could be the same territory the elephants have or overlap it, it doesn't matter. Neither pays attention to the other. What does matter is that the territory is not imposed upon by other male lions, because inside these territories dwell the females and their prides. And the one male services them. And doesn't want anybody else messing with his women.

When we arrived at Leopard Hills, we learned there was this one particular territory where a young male had been born and had grown up and now, at the age of five, was king of his territory, unchallenged, and — I will explain this in a minute — unmarked. It was pretty unusual to see a male unmarked. We saw him several times and indeed he was quite beautiful. It hadn't happened yet, but he was about to have big trouble, the guide explained to me. Big time trouble.

What had happened was that a "coalition" of six male lions had, just the week before, migrated into the territory. It was rare to see six males working together like this. But the guide knew of them because they had grown up in a pride about twenty miles away and people had described them when they were little and all six were either brothers or step-brothers. They were also just two or three years old. And they had not yet run into the unmarked king.

"The six are going to be too much for him," the guide told him. "It remains to be seen if he will fight or run away. If he fights, they'll probably kill him or nearly kill him. One of these six lions alone would probably lose. They're not quite full grown. Six is going to take him."

We "guests" — we were on the drive and looking at the six lolling around in some tall grass — were filled with questions. Would all SIX take over the prides? No. Just the leader of the coalition. The other five were in support for the moment. They'd go after another territory after the oldest was put on the throne here. Can't you do something? No. It's nature. It's about bloodlines. What happens to the cubs that the earlier line fathered? If they're under a year, the new king kills them. If they are over a year, he lets them live. But they have to pledge allegiance, which they will. Isn't this like the Mafia? Yes.

(top) lioness about to charge wildebeests. (bottom) King of the Jungle and photographer reflected in Land Rover mirror.

The oldest was actually separate from the other five, about fifty yards away. He was awake, keeping an eye out. The other five were sort of in a pile — sleeping in the tall grass with their legs up, rolling over, throwing one big paw over the shoulder of one of their brothers, growling softly and so forth — it looked like frat boys hung over, is what it did.

I said I saw lions mate. This was the next day. There was the big leader of the six, just sitting lion-like on a rise. A female — one of the females from the king's pride — was sitting under a tree staring at this new guy in town. Then she got up and slinked around. It's the women who always know first what's about to happen. He stared at her. She came over and flirted with him then walked away and sat under another tree. He continued to stare at her. Finally she gave up with this indirect approach, walked over to him again, and just squatted down in front of him. He got the idea and got on her. And there they were for maybe ten seconds until, suddenly she roared at him. Get off me. And he got. Don't ask me to explain this.

Possibly the funniest experience we had was at Quara Camp when our guide, Steve, drove over a low hill and began to approach John's Pan, a small pond of water that was surrounded by what looked like a golf fairway.

"A par five," I said to my girl friend. "Over water."

But there was a difference. There were eight hippopotamuses in John's Pan. Seven of them were sort of side by side, facing the shore we were slowly approaching. The eighth, a bit farther, was larger and obviously the bull male. The hippos blinked at us and alternated slowly coming up halfway out of the water, then sinking back down until only their two eyes showed above water. And they were looking at a Land Rover just like ours, with a guide, a tracker and six guests, which was parked by the shore. The guests were alternately looking suspiciously out at the hippos, and then talking to one another as if they were at a mixer. We pulled up and stopped facing them, and Steve got us all out. This was a standoff, eight hippos in the water facing two Land Rovers and fifteen chattering humans on the shore, looking back out at them. The trackers, on the order of the guide, pulled out identical white foam coolers from the back of the Land Cruisers. There was food and drink inside. The humans would have something to eat.

There were people from South Africa and Germany. There was a Dutchman. We were the only Americans. We were all Dr. Livingstones. And we stood on the shore and we ate and drank. The French stood off to the side and smoked Galois and drank Absinthe. They assumed poses and talked in French in cunning little French nuances. They'd pour some Absinthe in a glass — they offered it to us — then add water and it would turn cloudy white. It tasted terrible.

At this point, the bull hippopotamus rose up out of the water to his full height and walked about four steps forward. He stopped. But he was glaring at us. How dare we confront him and his harem? He opened his mouth wide and let out an enormous roar that shook the ground and would have been heard for miles if anyone had been anywhere within miles. We all stopped talking and stepped back.

Except for Steve. He stood his ground. Then he opened his mouth and roared back. A surprised look came to the hippopotamus. He thought about it a moment, then sank backwards down into the water until only his eyes were visible. We were okay. But he'd keep an eye on us, anyway.

And so we drank and ate, all shook hands, we humans, and then drove off in two different directions, and later that morning, about 10:30, returned to the Labala Camp where we were staying for an enormous breakfast.

Evaluate your risk at East End Cardiology.

East End Cardiology (EEC) is a local group of board-certified cardiologists who specialize in the diagnosis and treatment of cardiovascular disease.

You can help protect yourself through early detection and treatment. Now there's a way to look into your heart. Literally. It's called the EEC Scan64[SM].

The EEC Scan64[SM] is a brand-new, non-invasive, diagnostic tool that uses a 64-slice CT system to create a three-dimensional image of your heart. And East End Cardiology is proud to be the first in Suffolk County to offer this new technology.

The EEC Scan64[SM]

- Is quick, painless, and non-invasive
- Is performed in an open scan environment
- Delivers a level of detail not previously possible without using a more invasive procedure, such as cardiac catheterization.
- Detects heart disease before symptoms occur.

The EEC Scan64[SM] will evaluate your risk of cardiovascular disease. For more information or to make an appointment, call us today at 866-4SCAN64 (866-472-2664).

such a world-renowned author had such a modest home, and that he wrote a Nobel-prize winning book in a gazebo the size of a closet!"

Bob Schneider, a former principal of Pierson High School, and Jennifer Bianchi, an English teacher there, both said they appreciated that tours like this were keeping Steinbeck and the other late authors' memories alive.

"In my 15 years of teaching, I've never seen such excitement as when my student, Marissa Barran, won the Steinbeck writing award last year," said Bianchi. "She wrote an imaginary dialogue between Steinbeck and Jackson Pollock." This year's contest is coming up the end of May.

Maryann Calendrille, of Canio's Books, said, "This year, we will be coming out with other writings about Sag Harbor's literary history, in an effort to celebrate the writers and writings of this village."

ond wife, Ellen. Though twenty years her senior, the two dated for five years until 1994 when they wed.

McCourt jokes about his life as a teacher, hanging out in Greenwich Village with great writers of his day, then working for famous magazines and his teaching high school children how to turn their unimportant daily lives into something important. How he sat among these men and women who were successes in the literary world, only to feel less than them. Like he hadn't accomplished as much. He wasn't a celebrity, he wasn't a noted pen at some glossy covered magazine. All that would eventually change.

In the eighties McCourt and his brother Malachy put together A Couple of Blaguards, a play which explores the McCourts' lives and is credited as being the "springboard" for what was to come next.

At the age of 67, when most people's careers are put to bed, the unthinkable happened. The great American Dream was realized. Frank McCourt, an American-Irish-American immigrant released his first book. To say Angela's Ashes was a huge success is a slight understatement. Within a year, the memoir won the Pulitzer Prize, National Book Critics Circle Award, Salon Book Award, American Library Association Award, ABBY Award, Los Angeles Times Book Award, Anne Rea Jewell Nonfiction Prize, and the American Booksellers Association Book of the Year, not to mention the fact that it became the number one nonfiction book of the year for Newsweek and The New York Times (where it stayed on the hardcover bestseller list for 117 weeks). Michiko Kakutani of the NY Times even went so far as to say, "Angela's Ashes is so good it deserves a sequel." And so it got one.

The book that followed was 'Tis, the second installation of the McCourt memoirs. It picks up where Angela's Ashes leaves off: New York City with a 19-year-old Frank McCourt struggling to make ends meet, attending NYU, meeting a long-legged blond and trying to live the American dream. This year McCourt released his third memoir, Teacher Man, which captures his life as a teacher, his interaction with students and his battles against the school authorities of New York schools.

Although not owning a house in the Hamptons, choosing the likes of NYC and Connecticut, he has become as much a summer institution as the Hospital Gala and Polo. Year after year, McCourt sits at the epicenter of the Southampton Writers Conference's guest writers. He holds court over eager students and admiring writers who hang on his every word as if he is a Celtic sage. His charm and presence is immediate and undeniable. It is said that when he walks down Jobs Lane he is stopped in the streets and greeted as a celebrity — a hero; a man who rose from the slums of Brooklyn and Limerick to a high-rise apartments overlooking Central Park — McCourt has taken tragedy and hardship and given it a voice. Like the tales his father told him about the great Cuchulain, this is Frank McCourt's story and he owns every word.

The 10th Annual American Heart Association, Heart of the Hamptons, East End Gala Celebration will be taking place on June 10 at the Diamond Ranch in Water Mill. Jon Gruen, President of the Jason Foundation and founder of Gruen Optika of East Hampton, will once again serve as Chairman. The committee is proud to announce that this year's Gala will honor Dr. Valentin Fuster, Professor of Medicine and Cardiology at Mount Sinai Hospital in New York and recipient of the American Heart Association Lewis A. Conner Memorial Award, and Mr. and Mrs. Rudolph Giuliani. Both Rudolph and Judith Giuliani are being honored for their outstanding public service and their dedication to fighting heart disease and stroke. This year's Master of Ceremonies will be Ed Bradley, CBS Correspondent for "60 Minutes."

The Sheltered Islander By Sally Flynn

Sheltered Islander #396

Lyme Away

Somewhere on Shelter Island...

Bob: "Joe, you read about this? Some 76 year old guy in Florida posed as a doctor, went door to door giving free breast exams. Got away with it for a while..."

Joe: "Yeah. Great idea man, we shoulda' thought of that."

Bob: "Yeah. Hey....wait a minute... what about Deer Tick Inspector?"

Joe: "Deer ticks...lyme disease... damn, Bob, that could work."

Bob: "I got a white doctor's coat, stethoscope, I got a clipboard too."

Joe: "How come you got a white doctor's coat?"

Bob: "Ah..... Betty, she likes to play doctor - patient....you know...."

Joe: "Oh, she likes to play doctor - patient now? That's great! So... can I have your old pirate and slave girl costumes for Lucy and me?"

Bob: "Oh sure, Joe. Anyway, we could give it try... Deer Tick Inspector Lyme Prevention Team... I like it..."

Joe: " It won't work... the local girls won't go for it."

Bob: "Yeah, too smart, too bad."

Joe: "But the tourists are coming..."

Bob: "Tourists...yeah...what do they know?"

Joe: "This could really work, Bob."

Bob: "We only got one coat."

Joe: "We'll take turns."

Bob: "What'll we tell them?"

A tourist answers the knock at the door of her summer cottage.

Joe: "Good afternoon, ma'am. Dr Joe Smith. There's a severe deer tick infestation in this area. I'm here from the Lyme Disease Prevention Board to give you a free inspection."

Lady: "How nice, come in, look around."

Joe: "I'm not here to inspect the house ma'am. I inspect your person. Please remove your clothes."

Lady: "What? Are you crazy?"

Joe: "Lyme disease causes premature aging ma'am."

Lady: "It does? Well, I'm sure it's not that bad..."

Joe: "And it causes the reversal of any plastic surgeries you may have had. Like if you had a nose job, and got Lyme's, you're nose would grow back into it's original form plus a half inch."

Lady: "Oh my gawd!!!"

Joe: "Take it easy, ma'am, no need to tear off your clothes, I can help you get them off. I'm a trained professional."

Overheard in the grocery store.

Lady 1: "...and they send out Lyme tick inspectors too. Such a nice place."

Lady 2: "Did you pass inspection?"

Lady 1: "Yes. I passed once last week and twice this week."

Lady 2: "How often do they have to check?"

Lady 1: "Frequently I guess. This Lyme thing is a big problem here."

In a doctor's office on Shelter Island:

Doctor to patient: "What Deer Tick Inspection doctor?"

Jail cell on Shelter Island:

Joe: "Damn, Bob, that was fun..."

Bob: "Are they gonna charge us or not?"

Joe: "Only if they can find a woman willing to testify in court against us."

Bob: "Well, none of my 'patients' are gonna complain. If that cop hadn't seen you in the white coat at that lady's door, we wouldn't be here now for trespassing..."

Joe: "Yup, you're right. "

Bob: "So, is that lady gonna press charges now that she knows the truth?"

Joe: "No, she likes me. Let's just say, I'm definitely gonna need those pirate and slave girl outfits, Bob..."

TWENTYSOMETHING... By David Lion Rattiner

Spills

Everyone, at some point in life, spills something on themselves. Generally it is coffee. I was driving to work the other day, coffee in hand, when for some reason, I squeezed the cup too tight and the lid popped off. Since the lid was no longer there to keep the cup stable, my hand squeezed it more and it quickly collapsed, sending coffee flying everywhere, including into my lap.

I instantly thought about the woman that sued McDonald's for millions of dollars when hot coffee spilled on her lap while she was driving.

You would think that somebody would invent something to solve the problem and make millions of dollars. I bet you that somebody already has invented something, but the cup-making people pay him off every year so that they can continue selling their paper cups.

Coffee in the lap is always embarrassing, mainly because it doesn't look like coffee in the lap. People at the Dan's Papers office teased me a little. "Did you have an accident, Dave?"

"No, it's coffee."

Of course, it wasn't an "accident" for crying out loud. I wouldn't show up to work after peeing my pants. I'd call in and drive myself to Southampton hospital and get checked out. I'd need to make sure that it was just a freak thing. For the record, I have never peed my pants, not even from laughing hard.

Anyway, I was in the play South Pacific at Guild Hall over the weekend and a similar situation happened. Only this time, it was on stage.

There is a scene in the play called the radio room. My job in this scene is to be the radio operator and I'm supposed to alert the commander whenever we are receiving a message. It is a pretty easy part to play, because all I really have to do is pretend I am listening to the radio on headphones.

The desk that I sit at has glass Coke bottles on it to give the scene more authenticity. I'm supposed to drink the Coke occasionally while I'm listening on the radio. There is one part, however, where the commander yells at the top of his lungs and I jump in my seat in response to the yell. You can guess what happened at our Saturday night show.

I jumped in my chair and knocked the Coke bottle over, which then, in slow motion, spilled all over the stage and a large portion of it fell on my lap. This was not part of the plan for the show. But you know what they say, the show must go on.

With Coke soaking into my pants, I sat stone cold on stage and did everything I could to keep myself from laughing hysterically. I felt a jitter of laughter in my throat for a half a second, but shut it down by thinking about a dead squirrel I saw in the road when driving over to Guild Hall that evening. I needed to change my pants. This Coke stain, needless to say, looked like an "accident."

The scene ended and I ran off stage. "I have to change my pants, dude! They are wet!"

The choreographer was laughing hysterically but also quietly, "Dave, you don't have time to change, you have to go back on stage in a minute."

Oh, my God.

I almost forgot. In the next scene I come out and pretend that I am a shore patrolman, telling the nurses, sailors and marines that they need to load onto the boats. There was a packed house of over 250 people at Guild Hall that night. Two hundred and fifty people that were going to see this Coke stain on my pants and think, "Did he have an accident?"

I thought about my options. I waved over to one of the sailors, my friend Sam, "Sam, put some Coke on your pants, too, so I don't look so dumb."

"You're crazy. I'm not doing that. You are on your own."

Maybe I'll just run, I thought. They can't force me on stage. I'll just run and hide and blame it on a heart attack. That's it. I'll fake a heart attack and then I won't have to go out on stage with this wet spot on my pants.

Suddenly, I heard my cue to go back on stage. It was my moment of truth. Screw it. I went.

For those of you that were at the show, can you tell me if you were laughing because you thought my line was funny, or was it because of the giant wet Coke stain on my pants?

local landscaping company. And therein lies the issue — whether or not the local businesses will support such action taken by their employees? Some local businesses, such as the well known and respected John Papas Cafe in East Hampton, are supporting their worker's decisions to not work. Latin Express, a store owned and managed by Hispanics, will lock their doors for the day, saying, "we are part of the struggle, even if we are owners of a business, our clients are Hispanics, and we will be there for them, we are all together on this." Hopefully some good will come out of this much heartfelt passion and effort. The immigrants' song remains the same. "We are, and we will always be Americans." May 1 will come and go, but history may look upon it as a turning point.

We'd stay at these camps for several days going out on these game drives, then get driven out to an airstrip and flown in a single engine Piper cub for a half hour to another camp. There are no roads between anything, just dirt roads through the bush to watch the animals around all the camps, then hundreds of miles with no roads.

Landing at a camp, we'd be met by a guide in one of these open Land Rovers who had been dispatched out there to pick us up. The planes and camps communicate by two way radio.

Our first arrival at a remote camp was at Lebala Camp in northern Botswana in the Okavanga Delta. I learned something. We got out of the plane and the guide helped us with our bags to the Land Rover, but we didn't drive off. We waited. I wondered why.

"Just in case there's a problem with the plane," the guide said. We watched the plane safely take off.

Leaving Kwara Camp heading for Jack's Camp, our plane had to set down at a dirt strip at Chitabe Camp halfway there to pick up two other guests going off to Jack's Camp. You know how when you touch down in a small plane you hear the tires screech and the plane bumps along with the front end up so all you see is sky until it settles down? I was in the front seat next to the pilot. Out the front, suddenly, in the sky, I see a long neck with a little head on the top go bobbing by. The head looked a bit in a hurry to get out of there. It was a giraffe running across the runway just in front of us as we came bumping along. Just missed.

Zebra

Land Rover

So we go down to the end of the runway and turn around. Halfway back, on one side, are the guests in the Land Rover with their driver. On the other side of the runway, facing it, is a row of six giraffes. Just out there with nothing else to do but watch the planes land and take off, I guess.

Meerkats

After we taxied over to the waiting passengers we had to pick up, our pilot talked to the safari driver and he started up the truck and herded the giraffes further away from the side of the runway, into the bush a bit. Then he got off the runway and we taxied down and took off again, our runway happily giraffe-free.

This is Africa.

We saw some creatures called meerkats. These are the cutest things. They are furry creatures about two feet tall that look like prairie dogs and live in a hole in the ground, one hole to a family. They spend their time just outside the hole, standing on their hind legs with all their backs pressed up against one another so they can look out all around to make sure it's safe. Their front arms just hang down. You'd think they'd put one up to shade their eyes from the sun as they look around but they haven't thought of that yet. So there they stand, arms at their sides, murmuring to one another. Somebody sees danger, they have a little two-second assessment discussion, and if the assessment scares them, they scramble back down the hole. But then, shortly, one comes out to look about and if the danger is gone, they all cautiously climb out and get back in position again with the backs bumped up against one another.

They didn't seem to mind us humans. Just out side of Jack's Camp where we saw them, they looked at us curiously when we approached and chattered but apparently we passed the sniff test. So we looked at them and they looked at us for a while. But then, a few of them looked up worriedly and then they chattered and they all looked up. I asked the guide what they were looking at. There were a few birds high up swooping around.

"Those are buzzards," he said, "but the meerkats are not worried about THEM. You see that OTHER bird WAY up there?" Far off, I could see a slightly different bird swooping around. "That's the Great African Eagle. THAT they worry about. One of those can swoop in without a moment's notice at sixty miles an hour and grab a meerkat and fly off before they even know what hit them. They like meerkats live. The meerkats are watching the eagle closely."

I told this story to my son, David. "What a way to live. Afraid all the time that something's coming to eat you. What do the meerkats eat, anyway?" I didn't know. Stuff in the hole I guess, I told him. Worms and bugs. But they must like the sunshine.

We visited several native villages. Most men had one wife or maybe two. The chief had a bigger place with more wives. Came with the territory. The native people were very friendly. Happy to see us and show us around. They are used to safari guests.

Jack's Camp was perhaps the most unusual of all the places we stayed. Completely isolated in a desert area, it's a group of tents in what must have originally been an oasis. However, the tents are splendidly decorated, as they might have been a hundred years ago when they were used by wealthy white hunters. Decorated with what appear to be oriental carpets, they include a library, a dining room, a bar, a game area, a reception area. There's old display cases of stuffed armadillos here and there. There are posters on the walls of long ago hunters, savages and birds and so forth, also huge old guns on display. Think British Museum, but in tents. Absolutely, a unique experience. And terrific meals prepared by remarkable chef and also a PASTRY chef, right on premises. Wow.

(Jack's Camp was, and is, a favorite of Peter Beard, the legendary photographer who lives in Montauk and whose photos of African animals taken on safari are great treasures. His book THE END OF THE GAME was in our tent. Posters of some of his photography gallery shows were on exhibit on the walls.)

Usually, at these camps, we would sit and have these remarkably gourmet meals with our guides and some of the other guests who were there at that camp on safari and in the Land Rover with us every day. So we would all bond over profiteroles. Price of a stay at these camps includes all meals and game drives. I mean, wherever else would you go and whatever else would you do?

Mostly, the people we met at these camps were not Americans. They were from Ireland or Germany or Scotland or South Africa. We met an ambassador, we met a businessman. Table talk was often about politics and history. I do not support what George Bush is doing, but I really thought I could find someone, anyone, who would talk favorably about him so I could debate him. I could find no one. Mostly they said they just felt sorry that we had to endure him as our President. And hopefully it would all end soon without much further damage. The basic thought running through everything was that Bush had elevated a ragtag enemy, terrorists into a World War opponent, had sacrificed freedoms because we were "at War," thought of little else, didn't care what anybody else thought, had invaded the wrong country and had stirred up a hornet's nest.

One couple from Ireland talked about how Northern Ireland and the Irish Republic had just about gotten together largely because of the efforts of Bill Clinton. "He actually CAME to Belfast. He wanted to hear both sides. Can you imagine that, a man like him coming to our little country? We think of him as almost a saint. Now there's Bush and Ireland is not on his radar. We worry the situation might fall back where it was." The speaker was a history teacher.

I met a man who is a reporter for a British daily newspaper. He was part of Tony Blair's press corp and traveled with the prime minister wherever he went. I was curious as to what he thought of Blair.

"Blair is just going along with Bush. He's in the European Union, but he wants to remain independent. So this is how he does it. As for Bush, he doesn't take hard questions from his own press corps as former American presidents always did. I saw him do it and I could hardly believe this. He stage manages the questions. I don't know how the American press puts up with it. Actually, I do. If they won't go along with these rules, they don't get invited to come along. He hears what he wants to hear."

He openly expressed an astonishing opinion about our President. "Corrupt," he said. "The war is being run by Halliburton. And who owns it?"

Such are the conversations at camps in Africa.

So now I'm back home. I drive down 27 through the Pine Barrens, or Shinnecock Hills or Napeague and I look around, my binoculars around my neck. Any zebras? Not yet.

And there's been a change between me and my dog. I talk to him more now. And he likes to hear the sound of my voice. I think it soothes him. That's what he tells me, anyway. •

The film is starring Scarlett Johansson, as an impromptu nanny overseeing the spoiled son of a Manhattan couple, Chris Evans as an Ivy League hunk, Paul Giamatti as the overbearing patriarch and Laura Linney as the neurotic second half of a failing marriage. Alicia Keys has recently been cast to play Scarlett's best friend. A casting call for extras is being held on April 29th at Southampton High School.

We will have a small tent set up on the Revolutionary Triangle Common along the west side of Ocean Road. Here we will have goodie bags for the runners and registration just prior to the race, and we should have a short exercise program with a local fitness trainer for the early birds, various products and services given out, water and oranges and bananas and potatoes, and t-shirts for the first 300 runners. There will be a $25 fee to run in the race and the event will raise money for two different charities, the Bridgehampton Child Care and Recreation Center and FACT, the Foundation for the Advancement of Cardiac Therapies.

We also have arranged for an official race timer to run the event, with a computer clock overhead just like they have at the New York Marathon, and we will have committees doing cleanup for when it is all over. We also have to arrange to rent a small tent.

Also, ambulance and fire will be present and at the ready. Which was something that was nowhere in evidence at our first race.

Were we crazy to run a race with so little planning that first year? Maybe a bit. But it was a different time. The Potatohampton was the first running race ever held on eastern Long Island. There was no fitness movement. No understanding that people would sue you at the drop of a hat. There were just a few ecological concerns, no endangered species that we knew about, Jimmy Carter was the new President, there was no global warming and no SUVs. There was an enemy and it was the Soviet Union. And oh yes, people could run 10K. They weren't, in general, so fat. Oh well. Now we'll try a 5K. •

Dan's North Fork

The Wickham Murders

A Historical Account Of One Of The Most Fascinating Events On The North Fork

By Thomas Sarc

National Geographic once called Cutchogue "One of America's most charming, out-of-the-way small towns." Known for its fine wine producing vineyards, Cutchogue is also the town where a grisly murder took place in the 1800s.

Cutchogue was settled by the English in 1667. This was Southold's first colony and William Wickham was one of the most respected political leaders of his time in Suffolk County. He was elected District Attorney of the County four times, but it was the murder involving his brother that would be the most memorable case of his career.

William's brother John was the largest farmer in Suffolk County, and his brother James, who moved to Brooklyn in his twenties, owned and operated a successful grocery store there called Wickham and Corwin. By his early forties, James was quite wealthy and purchased at auction in 1850 the Albertson estate in Cutchogue, which included a mansion and eighty acres of farmland.

James and his wife Frances hired a number of servants and field-workers to operate the farm, but after four years he got in an argument with one of his field hands, Nicholas Behan, about Behan's hustling one of the house servants, after his proposal for marriage to her was rejected. Behan was fired for this offense, and at about midnight several days later, he crept into the house with an ax and sneaked into the bedroom where James and Frances were sleeping. Servants in the house heard their screams of "Murder!" and "Spare our lives!", but fearing they were next, exited from a second story window and raced to spread the alarm.

Would-be rescuers soon arrived to find the couple lying in their farmhouse, with a bloody trail leaving the scene. Frances died almost immediately, while James died hours later. A hat left at the scene confirmed that Behan was responsible for the crime and shortly thereafter he was found in a nearby swamp beneath thick brush and half-buried in the muck, his escape thwarted by the crime scene's location near the waterfront. Surrounded by an armed crowd of more than one thousand men, he was taken to the county jail in Riverhead, where a special prosecutor was named since James' brother William was the County District Attorney. A conviction soon ensued, and on December 15, 1854, Behan became the last person to be hanged in Suffolk County and his body was buried in an unmarked grave. James survived his wife by a few hours, so his estate remained in the Wickham family, rather than passing to his wife's family. William ended up taking over James' farm and he moved to Cutchogue late in the summer of 1854, declining to seek re-election for public office for several years.

Nightlight Savings Time

North Fork's Top Places To See The Light

By Phyllis Lombardi

For the last few weeks we've all experienced what happens each April, Daylight Saving Time. It's been around for years and years so each Spring when we set our clocks ahead, there's no particular fuss.

But what if we had Nightlight Saving Time instead? I would be the last to advocate for more night light to shade the stars. However, there are certain night lights I cherish. Those safeguarding me, those inspiring me, those reminding me. They're all found on the North Fork and what if a Nightlight Saving plan allowed them to linger longer?

Say it's 11 p.m. or even 2 a.m. How reassuring it is to see that the folks at Southold police station on Main Road in Peconic have all the lights on? They're not asleep on the job and in gratitude I'd even treat 'em to a cup of coffee. Generally, when I drive by the station in daylight, I slow down a bit, sit up straight, and hope that my fastened seatbelt is visible.

At night, it's different. Rather than avoid a policeman, as I might during the day, I welcome a police officer's attention. Those simple words, POLICE,TOWN OF SOUTHOLD, brightly lit in the deep of night, sure look good.

There's another comforting night light a bit east of the police station. I think there's not one soul on the North Fork who wouldn't agree with me. Out in Greenport, on Manor Place, a halo of lights surrounds Eastern Long Island Hospital, lights reflected in the waters of Peconic Bay.

For more than a hundred years, day and night, North Forkers have come to this healing place. But at night, especially, through blizzards and hurricanes and whatever else, ELIH lights have signaled care. I'm reminded of that delightful commercial, "We'll leave the lights on for you." And they have.

There are other lights in Greenport bringing joy to passersby and those fortunate enough to catch a ride on the Mitchell Park carousel. Even in winter the carousel is night-lighted, though not fully. Just a hint of summertime fun, music, ice cream, laughter.

And there's a hint of night light at Town Hall in Southold. Funny. One might expect bright Homeland Security-type lighting at the seat of our local government. But no. This is a to-bed-early town, for tomorrow is another good work day. Town Hall reflects our ways.

If perchance to sleep is to dream, then travel in reverie to Orient Point. Here the upper deck lights of a Cross Sound ferry become, for a moment, the lights of a brilliantly jeweled ocean liner preparing for a voyage to faraway places with strange-sounding names. Only at night – for there's no magic like this in the noon sun.

Slowly now, awaken and pass the American Legion Griswold-Terry-Glover Post 803 in Southold. Spotlight below, starlight above – both directed to their, our, flag. Colors aren't visible in this night light, but oh, say, can you see? Never more clearly.

Now catch a beam and head west. On Church Lane in Aquebogue there's a big old home with just one upstairs light on. Is it the bedroom of a Riverhead High School junior preparing for the SAT exam? Or a mom up late with an upset-tummy toddler? Nighttime

Dan's North Fork

Bayview Inn

South Jamesport Avenue
Jamesport
631-722-2659

Jamesport is one of those delightful spots on the North Fork where you really can feel that you are in a time warp back into days when life was quieter and gentler. If you turn off Route 25 onto South Jamesport Avenue and slowly drive to the end, where you can see the tranquility of Peconic Bay, you will find the Bayview Inn, where Executive Chef Tom Lopez continues to provide some truly excellent food at lunch and dinner.

Tom took us in via the bar. This is a beautiful bar with a great atmosphere to congregate in before your meal, or to spend some time with friends over convivial drinks.

Tom Lopez loves to try new dishes, so you will always find the extensive menu of regular favorites backed up by a specials list that changes weekly. There is no rigidity of style, apart from his insistence on using the very best fresh ingredients, locally sourced wherever possible.

Tom had arranged to serve us a selection of his current and planned specials and he started us with an Italian dish I must admit I had never heard of. It is called 'Strangolapreti'. Look it up if you want to know the history behind this strange name. It approximates spinach-based gnocchi, very delicate and perfectly complemented by a rich four-cheese sauce. With some of Tom's home baked bread this proved to be an exceptional dish that hopefully he will keep on the menu.

Because Tom's cuisine is very eclectic, the next appetizer brought back memories of Costa Rica. Ceviche made with lobster marinated in lime juice, served with fresh guacamole and a home made tortilla, brought a range of subtle cool tastes, plus more than a hint of fire and heat from the habanero pepper that Tom used to give the ceviche a special taste.

Asparagus is one of the regular dishes, and here it came with a Russian salad of crabmeat. A blend of tastes that might not immediately come to mind but which did, in fact, work very well.

For fish lovers, the cedar planked Atlantic salmon is everything you could desire. A portion of perfectly cooked delicate fish with that very special, almost indescribable extra something that comes from the use of a cedar plank during cooking. Finally, for our last main course, Tom went in a totally different culinary direction, with some real Southern chicken fried steak. This is steak coated in egg and breadcrumbs and then deep-fried. Here it came with a tasty peppercorn sauce and served over a mound of excellent mashed sweet potatoes.

Desserts at the Bayview Inn are prepared by Gail, the daughter of owners Bob and Pat Patchell. We only had a small amount of room left to taste the cream cheese flan, which is actually a Latin favorite made with dulce de leche and served with fresh strawberries. I found this to be a welcome change from the ubiquitous heavy cheesecake. This flan was light and full of flavors without being too rich or cloying. A great way to end a very enjoyable and interesting meal.

The Bayview Inn is a charming spot where diners can be conservative and choose well-known dishes or be a little adventurous and try some of Tom Lopez's specials based on cuisine from around the world. The food here is really top class, the portions are generous and the service is professional and very friendly and it is easy to understand how they have so many regular patrons. For anyone who really enjoys good cooking, the Bayview Inn should be on their 'A' lists.

Appetizers and soup range from $7 to $12; Main courses from $21 to $30.

North Fork Artist Of The Week

Author, Melanie Mitzner

By R.B. Stuart

As a child while awaiting nightfall, Melanie Mitzner would go to her bedroom so that she could read with a flashlight. Young Mitzner was so enthralled with becoming a writer, she'd read in the dark hoping that eventually she'd need glasses. She thought wearing glasses would make her look more intellectual and writer-like. "So I guess I was working on 'the look' first," she said with a wave of laughter. "As soon as I could walk unsupervised my parents sent me to the library. Of course I wanted to go buy candy instead. But they were determined to get us kids to read more," she recalled.

Mitzner was born into a large family of six in Atlanta, Georgia. Both of her parents were very creative. "My mother was an artist and children's fashion designer and my father's real love was singing. He had such a beautiful tenor voice, but unfortunately, because his father died early, he couldn't accept the scholarship he was offered at Julliard, forfeiting it by working to support his mother and brothers," she recollected.

In high school, Mitzner began writing poetry, short stories and plays. "I love using my imagination and transforming personal experience, research and observations into a world that doesn't exist," she explained. Mitzner went on to college and received a B.A., cum laude, in French Drama, from the University of Georgia. She studied screenwriting at NYU, the New School and privately with screenwriter Meade Roberts, who adapted Tennessee Williams' plays Summer and Smoke and The Fugitive Kind for the screen. In 1994 she relocated to Greenport.

Her biggest challenge is getting produced and finding the right agent that relates to her work. Mitzner has written nearly a dozen novels and plays, most recently Impala Suicide, a political satire.

She wrote a novel entitled, "I" about a triangle between a transsexual, a surgeon and his therapist wife. Her novel Slow Reveal was a finalist in the Heekin Foundation Fellowships in 2000. In 1996 her play Personal Effects received a fellowship from the M.E.T. Theater in New York and a staged reading was produced at Vail Leavitt Theater in Riverhead.

Her short fiction has been published in quarterlies, zines and anthologies. As a journalist, she has written articles for The Wine Spectator, Hampton Country, Backstage, Hollywood Reporter, Broadcast Week and Millimeter among other publications. She received an Edward Albee Fellowship for her screenplay Zero Gravity and was a finalist in the Writers Guild East Foundation Fellowships for her screenplay Dodge and Burn. In the 1990s two of her screenplays, In The Name of Love and Out to Lunch were finalists in the Houston Film Festival Screenwriting competition.

Mitzner derives inspiration from her 18-year-old cat Shadow, along with visual and dramatic arts. "Family dynamics is a central theme in my work. When I read a good book I want to start writing immediately. It's the power of good writing……it's amazing," she admitted.

She has been influenced by Meg Wolitzer, Jean Paul Sartre, Nicke Gorney and Toni Morrison. "In my 20s, I sent a manuscript to Toni Morrison at Random House where she was an editor. She replied with an encouraging letter, and was extremely candid about what it takes to craft a good novel. It made me realize how much work I had ahead of me," she conceded.

"When I complete a novel, I always want to do an adaptation for the screen. To do so would be thrilling," she ended.

In mid May, Mitzner will hold readings at the new Vine Café in Greenport on 100 South Street. Those interested in her work or upcoming schedule can reach her at melanie@thegroovymind.com.

OVER THE BARREL...

LIMA Uncorks Merliance in Manhattan

On Monday, October 3rd, the Long Island Merlot Alliance (LIMA) hosted a press and trade preview tasting at Craft restaurant in Manhattan of its first co-produced wine – 2004 Merliance.

Formed last fall by Raphael, Pellegrini Vineyards, Sherwood House Vineyards, Shinn Estate Vineyards and Wolffer Estate Vineyards, the LIMA believes that merlot is Long Island's signature varietal, and as such has dedicated itself to its advancement and continued quality in our region. In addition to the collaborative production of Merliance every year, the group plans to hold educational programs and sponsor research into exactly why Long Island is so well suited to growing merlot and growing it well year in and year out.

To make 2004 Merliance, which is 100% merlot, each member winery selected the two barrels from their own cellars that they felt best represented their own individual style as well as Long Island's unique terroir. With ten barrels of merlot, five wineries and five winemakers with differing styles, the LIMA knew that creating a smooth, well-integrated wine would be a challenge, but their hard work shows in the wine itself.

Tasted as a barrel sample — the wine won't be bottled for another two to four weeks and is scheduled for release in early August — one would be right expect the wine to be awkward, uneven or even severely muted, but that is not the case with 2004 Merliance. Medium ruby in the glass, its impressively aromatic nose offers rich, but not jammy berry aromas accented by sweet oak and gentle earthy-tobacco qualities. Given the diverse array of wines that went into the blend, its balance and integration are quite impressive with a fruit-dominated palate that is accented by ripe, soft tannins, light sweet oak, and hints of wet gravel and earth. Words like refinement and elegance come to mind when sipping this wine.

It will be hard for any wine lover to taste this wine and not identify it as a Long Island merlot. It shows off Long Island's terroir nicely even though, as Pellegrini's Russell Hearn said, "2004 was a slightly cooler, but elegant year. We didn't want to overdo the oak on this wine." Roman Roth of Wolffer Estate concurred, adding "It is a benchmark wine not for its power but for its elegance."

Members expect the wine's fruit flavors to develop even more before release.

Merliance 2004 will sell for $35 primarily at the tasting rooms of the member wineries. But, according to Shinn Estate's Barbara Shinn "A few selected restaurants and shops will (also) carry the wine." 60 percent of the $35 price tag will go back into the local wine industry in the form of local research and development, as well as education. According to Shinn "With a large percentage of the profits going towards research this wine is a bargain. It is a unique wine. Only 250 cases were produced and it's an extraordinary accomplishment by our members."

Looking ahead to 2005, Roth expects great things from Merliance and Long Island merlot in general going so far as to say "What 1982 was for Bordeaux and 1976 was for Germany 2005 is for Long Island." A bold statement but one that Roth no doubt feels will be reinforced by wines from the 2005 vintage.

In Merliance, the five-member Long Island Merlot Alliance has captured the essence of Long Island merlot. If you love Long Island merlot, you'll love this wine.

seems to draw us to the light and each other. Good luck, young student. Get some sleep, mom.

And there's another light down the road. From a TV, I think. It's probably a Yankee game from California.

All the night lights in all the North Fork homes. What stories they might tell. A lifetime ago we had an old, upright piano on our small enclosed porch. I played it, or tried, while my father accompanied me on his violin. This was mostly at night since my father was at work each day. Attached to the top of the piano was the ugliest little metal lamp you've ever seen. It shifted from side to side, bobbed up and down. But it gave enough light for my father and me.

Today I have another piano and a state-of –the-art lamp purchased recently in Southold. It gives good light, I'll say that. But never, never, will it give the glow of that long-ago night light shared between parent and child.Yes, Nightlight Saving. Not such a bad idea. We all have night light places and memories. Walk on and don't be afraid of the dark.

The house is expensive. Your mortgage shouldn't be.

No one has to tell you about the price of a house today. Just look in the newspapers or the window of your local realtor. While a lot of people negotiate to get a good bargain on their new home, a surprising number still don't receive the best deal on the mortgage needed to buy that home.

At Hudson City Savings Bank, we're out to change that. We've been in the mortgage business for 130 years and matching you with the best possible mortgage is our specialty. Among our features are:

ART COMMENTARY With Marion Wolberg Weiss

"LATIN AMERICAN EXPRESSIONS" AT THE WINTER TREE

While the current show at Sag Harbor's Winter Tree Gallery is misleading concerning its title (the art is not about Latin American aesthetics/themes and, in fact, not all the artists are from that particular geographic location), the exhibit has much to recommend it. We perceive the exhibit as representing individual expressions, plain and simple. Or not so simple as the case may be.

Hector de Cordova's work is a change of pace, based on past endeavors. In fact, we'd say it was quite an alteration from his usual imagery laced with landscapes and figures indicative of a lively place and/or culture. Often, Mr. de Cordova would evoke a narrative with his paintings or even suggest a subtle idiosyncratic quality. His pieces featuring a far Eastern culture were at once mysterious and indigenous.

None of these past works seem to have influenced Mr. de Cordova's present creations. In fact, they are expressive of a new direction, one based on geometric abstraction. Yet as we look again, we now see the impact that his bright, vibrant colors have always had on his art, particularly greens recalling the tropics and orange and browns ("Secret Carp") connoting life.

William Negron's work seems new, too, although his medium is the same: etching. He has always celebrated both figure and form, often showing the relationship between them. Again, that combination is present in this show as well, along with the examination of an object's structure (in his horse/rider series). His figure on a bike is another example, the bike representing a favorite subject of Mr. Negron's.

Work by A. Perez-Melero

There's something about his penchant for old-fashioned objects and his commemoration of a less complicated past that make his work endearing.

There's also the idea of a journey that we see expressed here in a new way. While horses and bikes are ways to execute such journeys, there's a hint of Cervantes in Mr. Negron's horse/rider series that is compelling.

Work by Antonio Perez-Melero appears entirely new, since this critic is admittedly not familiar with his past endeavors. His grid piece, "Manhattan," is an interesting variation on the usual conventions of artists who create grids. Particularly, the work relates directly to the title, conjuring up visions of New York's somewhat symmetrical core (with numbered streets in a row) and also its entrapment that the grid structure suggests.

Mr. Perez-Melero's abstract metal sculpture is also refreshing, at once recalling a contemporary knight and a rocket about to take off.

The show will be on view at The Winter Tree until May 31.

Honoring the Artist: Amy Pollack

No matter what profession we may personally pursue, the conventional wisdom is that, like oil and water, art and science do not mix.

There are, of course, arguments which could be raised against such a perception, that there is such a thing as the "science of art" and vice versa.

This week's cover artist, Montauk resident Amy Pollack, is living proof that mixing art and science not only works but has been proven very successful in her case: she has toiled tirelessly for women's health issues as well as been a productive artist. Ms. Pollack's dual careers have inspired equal devotion and aspirations, but currently her penchant for painting has assumed added dimensions.

As the artist herself explains, "I was always doing art even when I was a young child, learning about various media from a family member who was a recognized artist in Miami Beach, first working with oils, then watercolors and pastels. Learning how to stretch canvases. Creating art is like playing the piano; I'll never forget it. I'll continue doing it until the day I die."

Ms. Pollack soon learned that she had a lot of things she did not want to forget, a lot of things she wanted to continue. And so, she began her long journey, both literally and figuratively, receiving preliminary art training at the Boston Art School and at Brandeis University. Because she had an interest and talent in both studio art and art history, she decided to go to England for a year, working with the artist Gerald Wilde.

Yet a trip to India changed not only her world-view but her direction as well. It was there that Ms. Pollack was moved so tremendously by the poverty she saw that she decided to become involved somehow with women's health issues. She returned to the United States, obtaining her B.A. at the University of Florida; she then enrolled in medical school. Additional training and a M.A. in Women's Health took her to the University of Washington.

While Ms. Pollack practiced in the field for several years and even worked in public policy, she has since left her position with a large international, non-profit public health organization, devoting herself once more to painting. (The latter endeavor has paid off in various ways, including Ms. Pollack's winning First Prize at Montauk's 11th Annual Juried Fine Arts Show.)

The subsequent years have given Ms. Pollack's art additional depth and meaning, or as she puts it, "My painting has aged along with me over the last thirty years."

And while Ms. Pollack feels comfortable with her artistic pursuits, she still experiences the normal challenges artists face, like developing a process and work plan. Most of all she confronts the strains associated with deciding what images to use. "The struggle to find the right image is my excuse for doing the work," she says with resolve and inner strength.

–Marion Wolberg Weiss

You may view Ms. Pollack's art on her webb site at www.montauk-paintings.com. She will be showing at Montauk's Art Depot in July.

Dave Evans'

MINI – MOVIE REVIEWS

R.V.

Director Barry Sonnenfeld has proven himself on family fare such as Men in Black and The Addams Family and so this vacation-from-hell is a comfortable enough fit. Robin Williams grins and giggles his way through it all as one would expect, with Cheryl Hines continuing her lazy line in weary wives, but the kids are cute and funny and it all romps along perfectly inoffensively.

United 93

This is a feature-length dramatization of the events that took place on the fourth hijacked flight on September 11th, 2001. Is this a suitable topic for an action film? Is this a suitable topic for a film review? Totally unclear. This is earnest, well meaning and for all the political criticisms that it will be bombarded with there is nothing too egregious here. Nonetheless, misguided, to say the best.

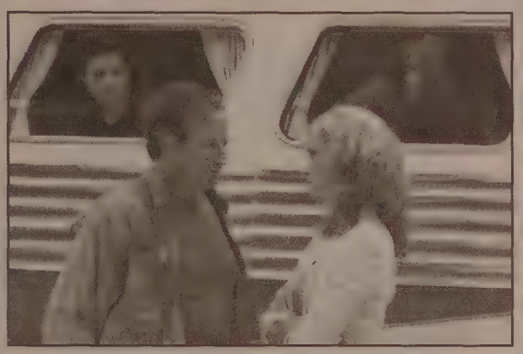
Akeelah and the Bee

Presumably hoping to ride the wave of warmth that met Jeffrey Blitz' 2002 documentary Spellbound, this is an attempt to fuse kid-from-the-wrong-side-of-the-tracks-does-good with the spelling bee setting. It's largely successful as family entertainment and Angela Bassett is rarely anything but a joy to watch. Unoriginal, of course, but pleasant.

Stick It

Haley (Missy Peregrym) is a young woman in trouble with the law who finds herself signing up for an elite gymnastics team, run by Burt Vickerman (Jeff Bridges). It makes no more sense than that. The worst kind of nonsense, it should come as no surprise to discover that this is the directorial debut of Jessica Bendinger, the writer responsible for Bring It On. Heinous.

American Dreamz



Paul Weitz, the man behind the charming Nick Hornby adaptation About A Boy, helms this satire of a country so in thrall to reality television that the president himself (Dennis Quaid) agrees to appear as a judge on an "American Idol" rip-off to boost his popularity. Though at times bordering on schmaltz, this is pleasantly pointed comedy. The remarkable Jennifer Coolidge is as unmissable as ever as the ultimate stage mother.

Silent Hill

If it's not the week for another CGI movie about wacky talking animals (especially a bird, voiced by Jason Alexander) then it's time for another film-adaptation of a videogame. That said, this tale of a mother searching for her lost daughter in a ghost town is surprisingly atmospheric, largely thanks to Christophe Gans, the man responsible for the deliciously camp Brotherhood of the Wolf.

The Sentinel

Walker in one hand and Viagra in the other, Michael Douglas unwisely steps out as a Secret Service agent determined to foil an insider plot to assassinate the president. The results are predictably uninspiring. Watching Kiefer Sutherland in action is always great fun, but with "24" on the air right now, this is entirely redundant.

The Wild

A New York lion finds himself accidentally transported to Africa and very much a fish out of water. This is the standard CGI kids' film, replete with the requisite number of celebrities voicing hilarious wild animals. Of course, it's great to hear Kiefer Sutherland roar like a lion and I, for one, cannot get enough of the new post-modern William Shatner, but this all just feels too familiar in today's market.

Scary Movie 4

The Wayans brothers have well and truly jumped ship for the fourth film in this sequence of gross-out horror spoofs. That said, not a lot is lost. With so much new and awful horror flooding out of Hollywood each year (Dark Water anyone?) there's always plenty of material and at least nobody is asking that this be taken seriously.

Thank You For Smoking

With a lovely title and a cast to appeal to all ages (William H. Macy right through to Adam Brody) this is a lovely satire on the power of advertising and the morality, or lack thereof, of corporate America. The comedy is slick and smooth, but underneath it all there lies a firm moral indignation. On top of all of that, it might just be the last time you see Katie Holmes out in the open.

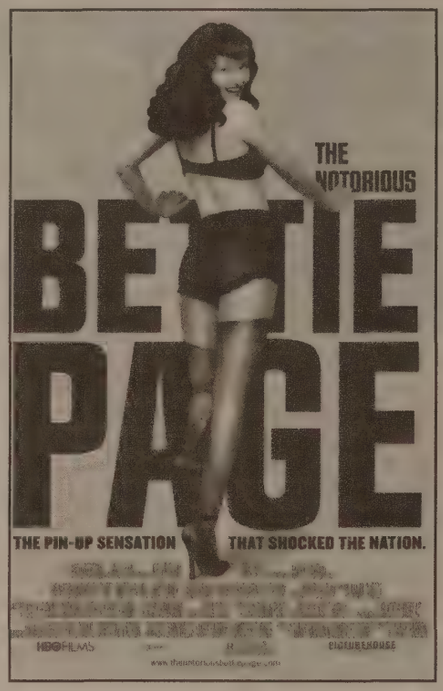
Guy de Fraumeni's Hollywood In The Hamptons

The Notorious Bettie Page

The bare, naked human body is presumed to be highly vulnerable. Nonetheless, consider the power of raw flesh on the senses. In many ways it can be used as a weapon. The Notorious Bettie Page covers, or rather uncovers, the joy and power of nudity wielded as a strength by using a 1950s pinup model to tantalize and arouse a stifled society and perhaps assume a position of dominating empowerment basically denied women at that time. It would follow then, as a natural course of events, that she would eventually pose in the strapped black leather of the dominatrix, with whip in hand.



The biographical story, unfortunately or happily, shows much more than it tells about the dark hair, banged (I don't think I phrased that properly) calendar girl Bettie Page. In a terrific, full-bodied, break-out performance in the title role, Gretchen Mol moves out of the shadows of groping obscurity into the glaring floodlights of a bright-as-her-glistening, waxed white skin career. The fact that it is produced, written and directed almost entirely by women reduces the inherent possibilities of chauvinistic pandering. Posing in the woods for a Camera Club, Gretchen's Bettie exuberantly removes her bikini bra voluntarily. Then, with great flirtatious enjoyment pulls off the bottom panty. In an audacious move of triumphant self-assurance she waggles her well-endowed bottom at the audience. Only the confidence instilled by her sympathetic crew could elicit such a grand moment of glowing, emotional strength.

The real-life Bettie Page remains fuzzy and non-descript despite all the hard focus,. reveal-everything photography that adorned garages all over the country. She left a poor but Christian town outside Nashville for New York City in 1949. Soon after setting down her valise, she was posing for sister and brother photographers Paula and Irving Klaw, clicked realistically by Lili Taylor and Chris Bauer. With Speed Graflex and other imposing still cameras as well as 8 and 16 millimeter movie cameras, they made provocative images that could titillate and capture the attention of a breed of sheltered folks who usually enjoyed calendars portraying warm illustrations of Tom Sawyer-type kids smoking corn-cob pipes and holding fishin' poles. Bettie, in her black, wired bra, lace panties and silk stockings held taut by a very black garter belt, photographed in a tacky living room, very much like the viewer's own, must have hit home! Greater highs were reached when, bathing vigorously in a bracing chilled ocean, goose pimpling her entire body, radiated an innocent aura worthy of Becky Sharp's glow of admiration for Tom's perky attitude. Bettie could be a good girl and, in black lace or leather, a vixen vamping her audience like a devilish, snarling hellcat.

My youth on the Cote d'Azur had me almost taking for granted the naked truth of the frail charm of suitless beach cavorting. Mais, Sacre Bleu! upon my return to the States the experience of a producer friend's nude wife dancing wildly on a banquet table in one of Sardi's private dining rooms as great opening night reviews came in had me scared to death. She wielded her body like a sledgehammer working it against the occasion and mostly her husband. Her assertive demand for recognition and revenge were as glaring as her nudity above us. The biopic of Ms. Page wants us to believe she used her body only for good and horrific abuses she suffered rolled off her back as easily as bikini tops. Oh' my sainted Mama, could she have performed miracle cures?

The Notorious Bettie Page was directed and written by Mary Harron and her writing partner, Guinevere Turner. Perhaps wisely, they keep Bettie's perky, uplifted personality full-frontal on screen. Yes, some bad times are covered: Her Christian beliefs in contrast, physical abuses, being framed by Congressional hearings on indecency by the Estes Kefauver committee. It's included in this *Police Gazette, True Confessions to Playboy (*Bettie looking jolly in only a Santa Hat) photo spreads. The movie is glossier and snazzier looking than the real thing and her story has been air-brushed to be a lot sleeker, too. Retouched out is the woman's mystery: Why did she vanish from the camera lenses as early as 1957? She wasn't reconsidered until 1980 when cultists brought out their amateur cameras.

I'm glad she showed up in 1980. I was afraid that at one photo session, she was buckled up in the black leather, a ball gag stuck in her mouth, and bound. Then someone switched off the lights and she was totally forgotten.

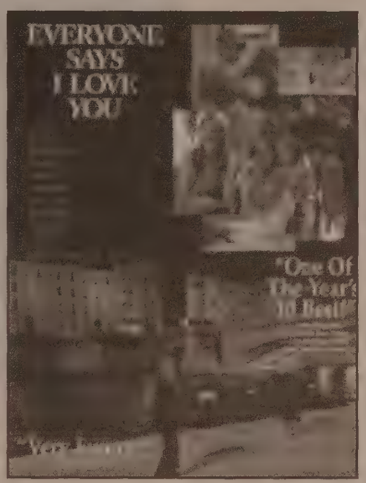
Everyone Says I Love You

Every season of Dan's Papers' "They Made the Movie Here" Film Festival must have a Woody Allen movie and what better than with another "regular," Alan Alda. So, Saturday, April 29, at 1 p.m. we present Everyone Says I Love You at the Ross School on Goodfriend Drive off Route 114, in East Hampton at the bottom of the hill, the auditorium is on the left. What surprises! Including refreshments.

Woody and Alan SING??? If you think that's funny, wait for more surprises. Would you believe Julia Roberts, Goldie Hawn, Drew Barrymore and about 50 Grouchos singing? And fetching further... John Cusack? They all croon willingly, if not ably, in Woody's nostalgic attempt to bring back a bit of the wonderful entertainment of the Hollywood Musical. Of course, Woody's cock-eyed view of romance is as off-beat as the actors-turned-singers warbling dozens of some of the best pop songs ever written and this makes Everyone Says I Love You a Looney-Tuney delight. Inspired by the great songs and plot-wise by A Midsummer Night's Dream (again), three couples wander in and out of their relationships . . . as do a younger set of teenagers (their offspring) who are perpetually springing off and on love affairs. This is all done to the orchestrations of the Hatpin's favorite ivory tickler, Dick Hyman, with deliberately kooky choreography that has people on the streets, patients and staffs in a hospital and even in a funeral parlor (catch the guy who has been cremated, gathering his dust together and doing a spirited solo dance).

Woody has placed the tune-filled action in the most glamorous locations possible . . . how about Paris, Venice, New York City and Southampton's beach. He opens in N.Y.C. in springtime with blossoms, flowers, foliage and fountains sprigging all over the place, Cusack is wooing his bride-to-be, Drew. Later, he surprises her with a too-expensive ring that is placed on the top of her creamy dessert, which she immediately devours. The ring that is. Fluoroscopes later, their passion resumes, but it signals to one and all that true love is not always easy to swallow, nor is it particularly true.



Goldie Hawn and Alan Alda are a very affluent (it's her money) married couple with a few teenagers (one is only hers and Woody's), she is D.J., played by Natasha Lyonne, a rather obnoxious, or I should say, Puckish meddler who, like Puck, meddles in the various couples affairs and narrates the "What Fools These Mortals Be" mish-mosh. Woody, divorced from Goldie, has gone through girlfriends who have been nymphomaniacs, sadists, drug addicts, you name it . . .it's no wonder they all have dropped him like a hot potato or the lukewarm neurotic he is. Natasha (his daughter, D.J., remember?) is anxious to fix him up and through machinations Machiavellian-style gets him close to Julia Roberts and . . .in Venice! Did I mention Woody lives in Paris? He's a writer who wanted to be a psychiatrist, but he figures he sees so many psychiatrists it's pretty much the same thing.

Woody's look at love is less acerbic than usual . . . like opening the movie in a New York City that resembles the Garden of Eden done over by Martha Stewart, and he makes the bittersweet wins and losses of romantic strife as affable as an Abbott and Costello argument. He checkerboards locations from N.Y. to Paris to Southampton to Venice and back and forth with picture postcard salutations. He also includes greeting card hallmarks of best wishes, with birthday wishes, get-well sayings, and with relish . . . the Holidays . . .Thanksgiving and, of course, Christmas in Paris and the Marx Brothers Ball given there. Woody and his ex, Goldie, do swell Groucho impressions and kiss and make up. I'll say no more. D.J. does a bratty, but better, job of explaining the slippery story.

Be at the Ross School for this happy go-lightly movie and sing along. You will be led by host Sarah Halsey. I remain your humble, absent servant, Guy de Fraumeni.

Entertainment In The Hamptons

review: south pacific at guild hall

War may be hell, but last Saturday night's performance of South Pacific was anything but. I haven't seen the John Drew Theatre draw such a crowd in months, and the tropical setting seems ideal for creating a tone for the coming summer season. In addition to the seasonal, the staging of this Rogers and Hammerstein classic seems completely timely due to its content. If you were to change the island to a desert, a lei to a veil, the South Pacific to the Middle East, the tale of love and otherness in a foreign land seems to resonate with equal strength now as it did when it first hit the stage in 1949. But this performance stuck to tradition, and we found ourselves stationed in the tropics, in the midst of World War II, but surrounded by paradise, waiting, along with the US military, for something to happen.

The cast of South Pacific

Rachel Goodale did a wonderful job as Nellie Forbush, the young nurse stationed on the island, who falls in love with an older French ex-pat, Emile De Becque (Glen Rozzi). We watch as the young nurse struggles with her emotions, wondering how it is that she has come to love a man twice her age, with children and a haunted past. At only nineteen, Ms. Goodale carries the lead role with veteran's shoulders, performing "I'm Gonna Wash that Man Right Out-a My Hair" and "A Wonderful Guy" with ease.

The tension between these two characters is weighted quite well with the humor brought on by Joey Giovingo as Luther Billis, the entrepreneurial Navy sailor who has his fingers in everything on the island. He is accompanied by his crackpot crew who do well to lighten the mood, and portray what it is to be stranded on an island with everything but what's important – women. Their rendition of "There's Nothing Like a Dame" showed a degree of harmony that community theatre sometime lacks. The humor was on cue and delivered nicely. When Ms. Goodale and a coconut bra-wearing Giovingo teamed up for "Honey Bun" the audience roared with laughter.

Two other actors who stood out were Darrell M. Cheney (Lt. Joseph Cable) and Susan Vinski (Bloody Mary). For Mr. Cheney's theatrical debut, he handled his role with control and a certainty, which I found impressive. His performance of "You've Got to be Carefully Taught" registered loud and clear, still addressing the xenophobia which runs rampant in our society. Cable's love affair with Liat (Jessica S. Goldstein), a young Tonganese woman from the neighboring island of Bali Ha'I, is touching.

Another great character designed to counteract the emotional drama of the musical is Bloody Mary, the wheeling and dealing Tonganese merchant. Susan Vinski was a riot in the role. Her delivery was timed like a true comedian as she nailed each punch line.

The cast as a whole had a cohesion and seeming admiration for each other, which came out in their performances and interactions on stage. This was evident throughout the production, but nowhere so clearly as in the final rendition of "Honey Bun."

Set designs by Frank Hollenbeck were simple and versatile, evoking a relatively strong feeling of atmosphere. I enjoyed the easy transition from Emile de Becque's plantation to the company street then to the beach and the Commander's office. Hollenbeck and crew's sets prove that stage restrictions can really be the impetus for creativity.

The emotion and humor of this surprisingly touching musical was balanced quite nicely, and that is a credit to director Michael P. Horn. When casting for community theatre, a director is faced with an immense job of choosing the proper actors for the proper roles. Horn did just that, paying attention to even the smaller roles, and casting the correct actors for each part, then giving each of them the courage and motivation to own those roles.

With only three shows left in the production, it's time you head over to the John Drew Theatre at Guild Hall. South Pacific is a wonderfully topical musical, filled with classic songs and some truly fine performances by some of our local actors. The final two shows are Friday and Saturday 8 p.m, Sunday at 2 p.m. Tickets are being sold in advance at theatremania.com or call 631-324-4050 or at the door for $20. Children under 12, $15.

preview: once upon a mattress at bay street

Waiting in the darkened wings of a hushed theatre, the scene before your entrance plays out. The banter of characters, the flash of lights, and then, you're on. Step out on the stage and become your character. Swallow that character whole, or more accurately, let the character swallow you whole. It's how I imagine skydiving would be, that sudden rush of adrenaline that shoots through your veins when you step from comfort into freefall, in front of an anonymous crowd. The love of the stage. I, for one, fell for it in the comforting presence of Helene Leonard.

Helene is the founder of Stages Children's Theatre Workshop, which is now in its twelfth season. I plastered on stage makeup and pulled on a black wig back when Stages was brand new and I was yet to don braces. Our proud cast of Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs was about 30 children strong. Since then, Stages has grown and changed, but Helene and her dynamic husband, Gene, are still at the forefront of each production. With their smiling faces whispering "Places, everyone," it always felt like a family production. This weekend, when Stages performs Once Upon A Mattress, 50 kids will take to the stage at Bay Street Theatre.

Once Upon A Mattress is geared towards an older audience than many of Stages' past performances. Helene considers this the year where "Stages grows up a little bit." Many members of the cast had just finished performing Grease at Pierson High School in Sag Harbor when the Stages season was beginning, and they had already caught that contagious theatre bug. So when Stages received the influx of more mature actors, they responded with a more sophisticated play. Once Upon a Mattress is the hilarious rendition of the original story of The Princess and the Pea, and has been performed on stages since its debut in 1959, starring Carol Burnett. In the years since, this offbeat, funny fairy tale returned for a Broadway revival in 1996, starring Sarah Jessica Parker. Then later, in 2005, a TV movie featuring Tracy Ullman as the Princess and Carol Burnett in the role of the Queen debuted.

L. to R. Meaghan Cornacchio as Lady Larken, Robert Kohnken as Sir Harry, Patrick McKenna as The Wizard, Emily Roberts as Queen Aggravain, Liz Oldak as the Jester, Noah Engel as King Sextimus the Silent, Raphael Odell Shapiro as Prince Dauntless, and Haley Willis as Princess Winnifred

Stages is devoted to performing professional quality, full-length musicals. Their venue at Bay Street Theatre in Sag Harbor only adds to the professional caliber of their performances. In fact, at this time of year, when the theatre out here is scarce, Stages offers good live performances for wanting audiences. Helene finds that "some people will even come without the kids because they just want to see some good theatre."

Theatre is a fantastic outlet for kids, a place where they can play with their creativity, push their boundaries, and sometimes find a true calling. In fact, one Stages alum, Jed Resnick, is currently touring with Rent. He played the prince in the first Stages rendition of Once Upon a Mattress. Who knows what talent and passion could lay untapped in this new troupe?

Granted, for most of us, children's theatre remains in our childhood. We step on stage, we feel that rush, and then we go on to become teachers, doctors, writers. But even now, the skills that I acquired from Stages are a part of me. During the summer sessions, kids take drama, music, and dance classes. Fun games that encourage self-expression like charades and role-playing dot the mornings. They audition for a show and work their butts off in rehearsals, performing a few short weeks later.

Weeks of practice culminate onstage in front of those anonymous faces. But when these "kids" step out on stage and allow themselves to be swallowed by their characters, they are no longer "kids." They are fine actors, turning weeks of hard work, memorization, interpretation, and effort into a performance that will have audiences engaged.

Stages involves young actors ages eight to eighteen. There are opportunities for participants to learn about set design, musical accompaniment, and backstage work as well. Performances are directed and choreographed by Helene Leonard. Musical accompaniment is by Amanda Jones and James Benard.

There will be two summer sessions this year, and summer enrollment is already underway. The July session runs from July 5 through 30, and the August session is from August 2 through 27.

Once Upon a Mattress will open at Bay Street this weekend. Performances are Friday, April 28th, and Saturday, April 29th at 7:30 p.m.; and Sunday, April 30th at 2 p.m. Tickets are $12 for children and $15 for adults and can be purchased at The Bay Street Theatre Box Office or by calling (631) 725-9500.

Entertainment In Town

review: three days of rain...by gordin & christiano

For anyone who doesn't know, the "Pretty Woman" is creating quite a stir on Broadway! Yes, Julia Roberts, the internationally renowned movie star, who makes around $15 million per film, is taking a big salary cut to test the artistic waters of the theatre by appearing in Richard Greenberg's drama Three Days of Rain and the entire town is buzzing. Why is she doing it? What does she look like in person? And the inevitable question: is she any good? Not since Elizabeth Taylor made her Broadway debut in Lillian Hellman's The Little Foxes back in the early 1980s has the theatre community been this excited and ripe with speculation.

Whatever the reasons for Ms. Roberts' bold move, she has been tremendous for business. The first week of ticket sales, the play took in a blistering $7 million before rehearsals even began. The attendant hullabaloo has gained momentum, building to a crescendo this past week. The event seems to have brought out the best, as well as the worst in many. Two local newspaper critics were, in our opinion, unnecessarily cruel.

First off, how does she look? From our third row aisle seats, where she played a number of scenes, she looks the same as on film. She's very thin with huge brown eyes and marvelous cheekbones that capture the light in wondrous ways. She is not a classic beauty, but she is striking like Audrey Hepburn. She has an unusual look that although not ordinary, can sometimes appear so, depending on her emotional state; but oh, when she smiles, she's a beaming light, radiating her very own beguiling charm.

The surprise is she gives a brave performance stripped of the trademarks that have maintained her superstar status. Although she lacks the nuance a seasoned theatre professional might have brought to the interpretation, she is, nonetheless, intelligent and authentic. Julia Roberts, to put it simply, makes an impressive stage debut. There is not a hint of self consciousness, except in the first act where her character, Nan, is uncomfortable meeting her brother, Walker (Paul Rudd), whom she hasn't seen for over a year.

Nan is Walker's well-adjusted older sister from Boston. The two are the children of Theo, a famous architect, who has recently passed away. Walker disappeared after his father's death only to show up months later at the downtown loft his father once shared with Ned 35 years ago in 1960. Ned and Theo together forged a renowned architect firm. Ned died years ago at the age of 38. Now with Theo gone, the two children have come to New York to hear their father's will and gain their legacy. A childhood friend, Pip (Bradley Cooper), is mentioned in the will as well and has joined them in New York. In the loft Walker has found a journal his father kept and by reading it hopes to discover the reasons for his father's coldness. Instead, he is only more baffled by the brief entries.

Bradley Cooper and Julia Roberts

The second act is a flashback to 1960 in the same loft. Cooper and Rudd play the architects Theo and Ned, respectively. Roberts plays Lina, the woman with whom the men were fascinated, Nan and Walker's mother, who the playwright describes as Zelda Fitzgerald's less stable sister. We discover that like life, nothing is really as it seems.

Mr. Greenberg's play was the runner-up for the 1997 Pulitzer Prize when it premiered in a production that many remember fondly. Indeed Rain is a well constructed play with clever dialogue and many excellent long passages.

Unfortunately, the current production as directed by Joe Mantello is flat and unmoving. He has allowed the men to give intensely mannered performances that lack emotional inner life, while neglecting Roberts, it seems. There are no surprises, no dichotomies to the characters and the chemistry appears odd instead of touching. There are no moments when you feel anything.

Roberts is freer in the second act, playing the emotional Lina, but she doesn't go far enough. She is quite lovely, however, and we do get her 100-watt smile for compensation, but I can't help thinking Mantello could have done more with her. She certainly seems able, but maybe there wasn't enough rehearsal time.

Santo Loquasto's fabulous set contributes to the mood of mystery, as well as Paul Gallo's excellent lighting, but the dazzling rain is the evening's highlight.

Three Days of Rain opened on April 19 at the Bernard B. Jacobs Theatre, 242 West 45th Street. For tickets call 212-239-6200 or at the box office.

When In Manhattan... BY OLIVER PETERSON

Giant Candy in Times Square

I've written a lot about Times Square over the years. It's very much symbolic of the huge changes Manhattan has undergone in the past decade, give or take a few years. It was once a very dark and depraved place, and now, in a miraculous one-eighty, the neighborhood has become quite the opposite. It's a madhouse of commercialism and commerce. It's bright and busy and bustling with tourists from all parts gawking at flagship stores, theme restaurants, and billboards representing corporate America's finest. If I had my druthers, I'd like to see a balance between the two sides of the city's permanently flipped coin. There's nothing wrong with fewer prostitutes, drugs, creepy derelicts, and smut, but sometimes I long for Manhattan's biggest visitor destination to represent culture a little more unique to the city and a little less like a gigantic and unending series of television commercials built up in lights and attention-grabbing edifices.

Be that as it may, it is, as they say, what it is. So we go with it, or we avoid Times Square like the plague that it often embodies. If you've been there recently, you may have noticed the gigantic candy looming over 48th and Broadway. I always do. Chocolate is a wonderful thing, and for a guy that likes to pick up a Reese's or a Take 5 or two from the counter rack at the East Hampton Hess on his way home from work, the massive, radiant, and seemingly living Hershey's Times Square store façade succeeds in its intended purpose. Yes, it's a proprietary collection of monstrous candy, but I happen to inadvertently choose Hershey's products when I'm after a chocolate fix. I like what they make. I grew up with it. Most of us did. Willy Wonka had the books and the movies, but let's face it – as far as chocolate goes, it doesn't quite cut the (pardon the unappealing combination) mustard. In fairness, Sweet Tarts are one of my all-time favorite treats, but let's stick (Mmm) to the chocolate. The 16-story façade is understandably tempting. It's 215-feet tall, 60-feet wide, and the biggest permanent fixture ever built in Times Square. There are 34 dimensional props, more than 4,000 chasing lights, 30 programmable lights, 56 neon letters, 14 front-lit signs, and (noted along with the rest of this information on Hersheys.com) "every major signage technique used today." Add in the four steam machines for that fresh-from-the-factory feel, and a tiny human vulnerable to the sweet allure of the Mistress of Cocoa hasn't a chance of escape. The Hershey's store wins. Every time. It's quite a sight.

Inside, you will become the kid in the candy store, no matter what your age. It should be no surprise that along with their edible goodies and true to Times Square and the various company stores, you'll find mounds of Hershey's-related products with logos of all your favorite candy and, of course, the store itself. This store is all about the spectacle and experience. The candy is overpriced – especially compared to the two-for-one rack at Hess – but going in and checking it out is worth pushing through the crowds, even if you don't end up buying something. Frankly, you'll have an easier time grabbing a Kit-Kat at any nearby newsstand.

Some of the more specialized items that can't be found at your local gas station or drug store make great gifts for the chocoholic in your life. The five-pound Hershey bar is a sexy beast to behold, and the personalized kisses are a fun and novel idea. For about five bucks, last time I checked, visitors can run a 15-minute personalized message on the store marquee for all of Times Square to see. Maybe a marriage proposal backed up by some kisses customized with a note to back it up? Sports fans do it at baseball stadiums. If chocolate is your only competition for her love, it might be a hit.

Now in its third year, Hershey's Times Square is a new development for a company that has brought us snacks for over a century. It's located at 48th Street and Broadway, and is open every day from 10 a.m. - 10 p.m. (11 p.m. after May 20th). Call (212) 581-9100 for more info.

TAKE A HIKE WITH KEN KINDLER

A Walk With Gene

Back in 1997, I wandered through the woods of East Hampton with several friends in an attempt to hike the newly completed sections of the Paumanok Path. The trail was still new then, and somewhat difficult to follow. Without Larry Paul's maps of the Pine Barrens, we would never have made it through Red Creek Park in Hampton Bays. At that time, the Paumanok Path didn't resume again until you reached the western border of East Hampton. As we were hiking there we found the trail well marked and easy to follow, but when we had hiked for some time without seeing a white rectangle blaze (the blaze used to mark the Paumanok Path), we stopped to look at our compass and map. A friendly guy walked over and reassured us that yes, we were in fact on the Paumanok Path. He helped us to get oriented with our maps, gave us membership cards for EHTPS, and introduced himself as Gene Makl.

EHTPS group at Kirk's Place

Gene, who had greeted us that day from a trail near his backyard, later become a very practical, "get things done" president of EHTPS. Gene served as president from 1999-2001.

This past week I had the pleasure of hiking with Gene again as he led the EHTPS weekly Wednesday hike. This one met on Northwest Road by the Van Scoy Cemetery and the School House Plaque. I arrived late, so I had to catch up with the group and was disappointed when I realized that I had missed hearing Gene's historical introductory narrative. I quickly headed east, stepping past the newly refurbished Van Scoy Cemetery, so that I could catch up with the rest of the group.

The Paumanok Path follows Scoy's Pond Road here. On the west side of Northwest Road this woods road takes you past Scoy's Pond. Traveling southeast from the side of the road the parking area is on, the trail enters the Grassy Hollow Preserve. Along with the white rectangle blazes, there are also the orange rectangle blazes of Foster's Path. These two trails travel south together about 4 miles to Chatfield's Hole, off Two Holes of Water Road. We followed these trails for about 1.5 miles to a powder blue-blazed trail, that heads east back to Northwest Road. We turned right (north) and walked along the shoulder of Northwest Road for a short distance. We then entered Whalebone Landing Road, and walked through a metal gate on the west side of the road. Whalebone Landing is a woods road. It runs through the "five corners intersection," and continues west to Northwest Harbor. We rested a bit while enjoying a beautiful view of the harbor. Then we turned around, and headed back down Whalebone Landing Rd. This time we took an immediate left onto a trail running north along the shore, to Kirk's Place. Here we gazed out across the harbor at the bluffs of Barcelona Neck State Preserve, North Haven, and the lighthouse at Cedar Point County Park. Josiah Kirk settled here in the 1860s. He was the owner of a beautiful 230-acre homestead that unfortunately fell to ruin while he fought in the courts for the exclusive rights to the eelgrass that washed ashore on his beach. Eelgrass was a useful commodity at that time and evidently worth fighting for.

We followed Scoy's Pond Road east, past the spur trail on our left, leading to Scoy Pond. (Scoy Pond is part of the Headwaters of Alewife Brook that flows to Alewife Brook, through the southern section of Cedar Point Park, out to Northwest Harbor.) We then crossed Northwest Road to the dirt parking area.

I had never thought to link those trails together to form a loop hike. Gene, thank you once again, for sharing your extensive knowledge of the East Hampton trails system with us.

Directions to the School House Plaque on Northwest Rd. in East Hampton's Northwest: On Montauk Highway (heading east) you will see the Wainscott town sign. Pass Daniels Hole Road (this is the road for the East Hampton Airport.) Take the next left turn (North) Stephen Hands Path. Bear left onto Old Northwest Road. Stay on Old NW RD. until you reach Northwest Road. Make a right onto Northwest Road. Park by the School House Plaque on Northwest Rd., about 3/10 mile from the intersection with Alewive Brook Rd. You can follow the signs for Cedar Point Park onto Northwest Road.

Shop 'til You Drop... With Maria Tennariello

The sales are blooming all over the East End, so the shopping should be in your budget for sure. The shops are running am assortment of sales and promotions to kick-start the season. Mother's Day is coming up, so get going and start shopping!

At TC Men & Women, located at 43 Jobs Lane in Southampton, there is a huge "clearance sale," saving you 50% off everything in the store in order to make room for their new inventory. The sale runs until April 30, so look for great buys on designer jeans, dress shirts, vintage tees, skirts, tops and so much more. While you're there, check out Norah's Outlet on the second floor where everything has been reduced from 10% to 50% off regular prices, also until April 30. This is a goodie!

Don't forget the 50% off "relocation sale" at Second Chance on Main Street in Southampton.....This is the last week, as they are moving on May 1 to West Main Street (back parking lot).....The stuff is flying out the door. I found a beautiful corner hutch for my dining room at half price, what a deal!

If you are getting your home ready for the 'guest rush' this season, you might want to check out the "spring mattress" sale that is in progress right now at all the Sleepy's locations. There is one in every town; Riverhead, Hampton Bays, Southampton, Bridgehampton, and East Hampton. So.....you don't have to travel too far for this sale that even includes a bonus seven piece luxury linen package.....

The Bridgehampton Commons was buzzing on Saturday..... if you got a chance to stop into Pay Less, you caught the "buy-one, get-one 50% off" sale, which is in progress right now. I found about four pairs that I loved, and saved some money.....Also in the Bridgehampton Commons, Ann Taylor Loft is having a 50% off clothing and accessories sale. GNC is having a 50% off sale on their health products and more.

Nearby on Snake Hollow Road in Bridgehampton at English Country Antiques, you can fill your linen closets with their 20% off sale on the new linens that have just arrived here. Get ready for summertime, get going, and get making those guest beds.

On The North Fork: At Tanger 1, in Riverhead, Zales, The Diamond Store is having a "Our Customer Appreciation" weekend sale on Saturday, April 29, and Sunday, April 30. Dig your heels in and get going in order to save on fabulous pieces of jewelry that are already 20% to 70% off traditional retail prices. And.....save an additional 10% to 15% off while you're there. You must ask to see their "WOW" price breaks. And here's the best part of this sale, if you mention my column, "Shop 'til You Drop in Dan's Papers," you will receive an additional discount of 10% off, this weekend only. This is a cool event, shop with festivities, DJ and more! Get going and save, save, save!

Also in Riverhead on Route 58, at Kaufman Allied there is a "big savings sale" on floor models and clearance merchandise, some of which are reduced by 40%. In the large showroom, look for outdoor furnishings in aluminum, resin, redwood, cast aluminum, teak, Brazilian cherry wood and wicker. There is also rattan indoor furniture available in this sale. If you love the Wave Chaise in great shades of green and tan, you will get it for $119.

At Harrow's on County Road 58, Riverhead, the semi-in-ground pools are priced starting under $4,000 and there sre four bonuses on select outdoor furniture sets. Also, it's a great source for that outdoor Jacuzzi that you might have been thinking about installing on your deck or patio.

Just a friendly reminder to mark those calendars for the 2nd Annual Hamptons Home & Garden Show next weekend, Saturday and Sunday, May 6 and 7 at the Southampton Elks Club Fairgrounds on County Road 39 in Southampton. This is a homeowners one-stop-shop under one big tent.....You will find one-of-a-kind merchandise in collectable art, furniture, wine cellars, rare antique wood flooring, landscape design, lighting, pools, spas, cars, pianos (yes pianos), interior design and so much more. This is the second annual home and garden event and will be bigger and better than last year's. If you love to shop, and are looking for the best of the best in products and merchandise for your home and garden, this is the place to be next weekend for sure. I will be there with my shopping shoes on.....See you there! For more information call 631-283-5505 or log onto their website at: www.hhgshow.com.

Until next week. Ciao and Happy Spring Shopping!

If you have any questions or comments, or your shop is having a sale, and you would like everyone to know about it, I would love to hear from you via E-mail at Shoptil@danspapers.com or you can reach me by fax at: 631-537-6755.

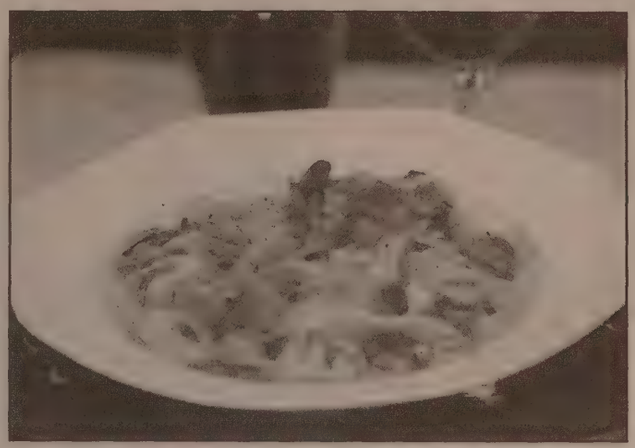
Silvia Lehrer's Cooking Column

Today no one seems surprised to learn that whole grains are good for you. A river of scientific research shows that the more fiber-rich foods we eat, the healthier we get. New whole grain and whole wheat products are being introduced in the market place at a quickening pace and are taking the form of breads, pastas, rice and dried cereals.

Labeling on these products is undergoing a more positive change and will hopefully provide the consumer with much needed guidance.

Rebecca Woods, author of The Splendid Grain, Morrow, 1997, pretty well sums it up when she writes, "A grain is more delicious when intact, rather than when polished, pearled, degermed, or refined. The germ contains the spark of life and the bran gives shape to the form and kernel. Both germ and bran are concentrated sources of nutrients. That is why whole grains make us feel good and provide us with boundless energy."



SOBA NOODLE SALAD WITH CUCUMBER AND CHERRY TOMATOES

Packages of dried soba noodles or whole grain Japanese noodles are readily available in supermarkets and health food stores.

Serves 4-6

5 ounces buckwheat noodles from an 8.8 oz package

For the salad

2 tablespoons white or yellow miso, available in health food stores
2 – 2 1/2 tablespoons dark sesame oil
1 tablespoon rice vinegar
2 teaspoons fresh grated ginger
1/3 cup thinly sliced scallions
Pinch red pepper flakes
Freshly ground pepper to taste
1 medium cucumber, peeled
8 cherry tomatoes, halved
1 cup basil leaves, cut into julienne
2-3 tablespoons fresh lime juice
2 tablespoons chopped flat-leaf Italian parsley

1. Bring 3 quarts water to a boil in a 5-quart saucepan. Add the buckwheat noodles, stir gently and reduce heat slightly. Foam will form and swell to the top. Immediately add 1/2 cup cold water to prevent the pot from overflowing. Repeat with cold water 2 more times as necessary until the noodles are cooked al dente, about 7-8 minutes. Drain in a colander and rinse under cold water to stop the cooking. Spread on a plate and set aside.

2. Place the miso, sesame oil, rice vinegar, ginger, scallions, pepper flakes and pepper in a large mixing bowl and stir to mix. Add the cooled noodles and toss to coat.

3. Halve the cucumber lengthwise, scrape out the seeds and cut crosswise into thin slices. Add to the noodles with the cherry tomatoes and basil and stir gently to mix. Transfer to a serving platter, sprinkle with lime juice and parsley and serve.

LINGUINE WITH ASPARAGUS, SHITAKE MUSHROOMS AND TOMATOES

Prepare this dish in spring when asparagus is at its best and "tomatoes on the vine" currently have the best flavor.

Serves 4 as main course or 6 as first course

1 pound medium asparagus
1/3 pound shitake mushrooms
3 ripe tomatoes, about 1 1/4 pounds
4 tablespoons unsalted butter
3 shallots, finely chopped
2 cloves garlic, finely chopped
Coarse (kosher) salt and freshly ground pepper to taste
2-3 tablespoons finely chopped, flat-leaf Italian parsley
1/2 cup pasta cooking water
1/2 cup finely grated Parmigiano-Reggiano cheese

For the pasta

1 pound whole wheat linguini or spaghetti
Coarse (Kosher) salt for the cooking water

1. Snap off the tough ends of the asparagus where they naturally break, Trim off the points along the stalk, cut asparagus on the diagonal into 2-inch pieces and rinse. Blanch asparagus in salted boiling water for 2 minutes, drain and set aside. Cut off mushroom stems and discard, rinse mushroom caps quickly in a colander and pat dry, then slice about 1/4 inch thick. Blanche tomatoes in boiling water for 30-40 seconds, peel, seed and coarsely chop.

2. In a large skillet, melt the butter and when foam subsides, sauté the shallots and garlic about 1 minute, stirring occasionally. Add mushrooms to the shallots and garlic and sauté for 3-4 minutes. Put in asparagus and cook for 3 minutes longer until barely tender, then add tomatoes. Season vegetables with salt and pepper to taste. Stir in parsley and remove from heat. Can be prepared ahead to this point.

3. Bring a large saucepan of water to the boil, add 1-2 tablespoons salt, then put in the pasta. Separate the strands with a pasta fork and cook at a rolling boil for about 8 - 10 minutes, or until al dente.

4. Several minutes before the pasta is ready return the skillet containing the vegetables to medium heat and stir in half the cheese. Add the pasta cooking water to soften the mixture and keep warm over low heat. Taste to adjust seasoning if necessary.

5. Drain the pasta, transfer to the skillet containing the sauce and mix gently. Remove from heat. Serve on warm plates sprinkled with grated cheese. Pass extra cheese at table.

GREAT FOOD IN A COMFORTABLE SETTING

Dining in the Hamptons

Side Dish

By Aji Jones

Hey East Enders! Remember that yummy food that you used to get at Jeneen's on Three Mile Harbor in East Hampton? Well, if you're in the city, ya gotta go visit Freddie (Fiengo) at his new Southern Italian eatery, Tre Scala, located on E. 81st Street, between 1st and 2nd Ave. Freddie has created the quintessential neighborhood dining spot – he's even got a table for two outside on the sidewalk. Some of you may also remember his son Freddie, Jr., who was formerly chef at Savanna's. He's there as well. Call (212) 288-7374.

The Hamptons tradition of the Golden Pear Café, where any one can get a great cup of coffee, savor a freshly-made breakfast or lunch and people watch, extends to Sag Harbor. The fourth and newest location will open at the end of May, on 111 Main Street at the site formerly known as The Harbor Deli. For more information, call (631) 287-4242. Also, the Golden Pear, in East Hampton, celebrates its 15th anniversary starting on Thursday, April 27 through Thursday, May 11th, with specials such as a 15-piece baker's dozen of bagels or muffins or a chance to win free coffee for 15 days. The first day of the celebration, free hand made cookies will be available. For more information please call (631) 329-1600.

On Sunday, April 30th at Almond Restaurant, in Bridgehampton, will be celebrating their 5th anniversary with a soiree from 6 to 8:30 p.m. featuring $5 drinks and complimentary passed hors d'oeuvres. The grand prize-winner will also be drawn for the trip for two to Paris. For more details call (631) 537-8885.

Eat your breakfast! The Hampton Maid, in Hampton Bays, is open for the season serving breakfast starting at 7 a.m. daily. In addition to their country style breakfast, daily specials are also available such as fresh berries in crème, seasonal fruit with yogurt, old fashioned corned beef hash, garden fresh vegetable omelets made to order, eggs benedict, steak 'n eggs and much more. Unlimited coffee is served with every breakfast. Go to www.hamptonmaid.com or call (631) 728-4166 for more details. Tully's Gourmet Seafood Market, also in Hampton Bays, is now open for the season from 10:30 a.m. to 6:30 p.m. For information please call (631) 728-9043. Re-opening for the season, Orient by the Sea Restaurant & Marina, in Orient Point, will re-open on Friday April 28th for lunch and dinner. For more information call (631) 323-2424. Antares Café, in Greenport, opens for their 7th summer season with an all-new menu on Thursday, April 27th. They are open Thursday through Sunday for lunch and dinner. To start the season they are offering a three-course lunch menu for $19. For a complete menu or reservations call (631) 477-8839.

Cittanuova, in East Hampton, is offering pasta for two every Thursday night in April. On Wednesday nights they have a steak special for $19, which features a New York strip steak served tagliata-style, drizzled with white truffle oil with arugula and Parmesan salad. For information call (631) 324-6300. Also in East Hampton, The 1770 House Restaurant and Inn is serving a three-course prix-fix menu for $30, all night, every night except Saturdays. Go to www.1770house.com or call (631) 324-1770 for more information. Pomodoro Restaurant and Pizzeria on North Main Street, in East Hampton, is serving a $12 daily prix fixe lunch, a $21 prix-fixe dinner with a complimentary glass of wine every Tuesday, and two-for-one pasta entrees every Wednesday. They offer classic Italian cuisine and brick oven pizzas as well as gelati and sorbetti for dessert. For more information call (631) 329-3663 or go to www.pomodoroeasthampton.com.

Saracen Restaurant and Bar, in Wainscott, is offering a $26 prix fixe menu that is available everyday except on Saturdays. Dinner is served starting at 5 p.m. For reservations or for more information call (631) 537-6255.

If you're in Southold, check out The Seafood Barge for their fresh seafood. A sampling of appetizers include crab meat fondue with yukon gold potato chips; ceviche of striped bass with homemade noodles and spicy mayonnaise; For entrees there is sauteed monk fish with crab meat, green & yellow zucchini, rice noodles, cilantro & blue crab bouillon; grilled free range chicken and poached rock shrimp with fettuccini, to name a few. The wine selection is extensive, and offers many of the finest selections from the North Fork wine country. For reservations or more information call (631) 765-3010.

Dining in the Hamptons

Civilized People Must Have Morels

Along with asparagus, peas, artichokes and even strawberries, the spring season brings us morels. This highly unusual mushroom is of recent evolutionary vintage, so much so that it even looks like the Cro-Magnon of mushrooms. Having not yet developed the familiar mushroom head, these organisms, which began evolving from yeast at the end of the last Ice Age, look like sponges. Whatever their history and odd appearance, they provide a delicious, earthy flavor that goes well with other spring vegetables and most meats.

I was introduced to morels when a friend prepared a simple, yet extraordinary dish for me some years ago: a salt-baked chicken served with a rich morel-cream sauce. Baking anything in a crust of kosher salt brings out its flavors and maintains its juices. But the skin must then be removed, leaving a pale, almost pasty-looking meat. Enter the sauce. In the case of the chicken, the dark and earthy morels provide the perfect aesthetic and flavor balance.

Since being served that dish (found in the Second Helpings cookbook), I have made it for my own guests many times. Yet, I had not thought of morels for any other purpose until I read Think Like a Chef, which is more about explaining technique than listing recipes. Towards the end of the cookbook, there is a chapter on seasonal cooking, in which different methods of cooking are used to prepare the same three or four seasonal ingredients. The spring ingredients are asparagus, ramps (which are wild leeks) and morels.

The recipes are incredibly diverse, proving that good cooking requires only good ingredients and application of basic techniques. Among them are a ragout of asparagus, ramps and morels; baked free-form ravioli with those same ingredients; a sole served with the same ingredients; and a pan-roasted poussin, again with the same ingredients. In each recipe, the ingredients are treated differently, but always served together.

Just recently, I cut out a sinfully rich breakfast recipe for eggs and morels baked in cream from Martha Stewart Living. There is something so perfect about the cream and morel combination, as appears in the salt-baked chicken recipe too. Perhaps this is because morels are so earthy and nutty that they can stand up to the richness and heaviness of cream better than their more highly evolved and, therefore, refined mushroom cousins.

For a brief time during the spring, fresh morels are available. It is best not to clean them unless necessary, as the water starts removing their flavor. Taste one to see if it is gritty. If so, dip the morels briefly into a bowl of cold water, remove them gently with your hands, and blot them dry with a paper towel. Thanks to the miracle of modern food preparation, one can buy dried morels year-round. Before they can be cooked, dried morels must be soaked in a bowl of warm water for about 20 minutes. Once removed from the water, the morels must be gently blotted with a paper towel, doing away with the excessive water they absorbed. Then, even if a recipe does not say so, reserve some of the soaking water and incorporate it into the pan when you cook the morels, so as to bring back some of the lost flavor.

Internet research informs that morels grow in many different places, and that there are morel hunting clubs all around the country. While I prefer to hunt for my food at the grocery store, the dedication to morel hunting somehow makes sense to me, given their ephemeral season and wondrous flavor. There is even a website called morels.com, which features message boards about morels in different states. Michigan seems to be the focal point for many morel clubs, and one can attend the Morel Mushroom Festival in Boyne City, Michigan from May 18 through May 20.

Eggs and Morels Baked in Cream

1 tbsp unsalted butter, plus more for baking dishes
1 small shallot, finely chopped
8 fresh morel mushrooms, halved lengthwise
1 cup heavy cream
4 large eggs
Salt and pepper
1 tbsp finely chopped chives
Crusty bread

Preheat oven to 350 degrees. Melt the butter in medium a skillet over medium-low heat. Add shallot and cook until softened, about two minutes, stirring constantly. Add morels and pinch of salt, and cook until softened, about five minutes, stirring occasionally. Add cream, bring to simmer, and immediately remove from heat. Allow to sit for five minutes. Butter four 6-inch baking dishes, such as gratin dishes. Add one egg to each dish without breaking the yolk, season with salt and pepper, divide morel-cream mixture evenly among the dishes, and garnish each with chives. Bake dishes on a baking sheet until egg whites are just set, about 9 to 12 minutes. Serve with bread.

Stress Recedes Like the Tide at Gurney's Inn

Life is good. Life is really good. That's because yesterday I had a detox spa day at Gurney's Inn and am still feeling the benefits of this pampering today. Let me tell you, there are a lot of things that can add stress to your life and learning how to get that stress out of you is very important for your overall health. The spa treatments at Gurney's Inn are known by spa experts around the world as being some of the best and after experiencing a detox day, I can tell you first hand that you are in for a treat.

I met Margarita Bernard, a half Italian, half Greek woman who was born in Argentina, and who has been working for Gurney's for 26 years. Needless to say, this woman knows what she is doing. It was amazing how comfortable I felt when we met in the treatment room. I could tell I was about to get "the works" from one of the best women in the business.

Margarita had me lie down on my back as she scrubbed down my body with a brush to exfoliate, then had me move off the table and to a large tub, already filled with hot sea water directly from the ocean. "Seaweed and sea salt are some of the healthiest things that you can put onto your body," Margarita said.

The second I got into this tub, it became clear to me that I was sitting in something that was state of the art. There were jets everywhere, and at the flick of a switch, I heard the rumble of the tub start up like a jet engine. To my left I saw an electronic display indicating what part of my body was going to be massaged. This was no ordinary tub. I learned that it was manufactured in Germany and cost $25,000 to purchase. I was sitting in a $25,000 tub. Like I said, life is good.

With the soothing seawater surrounding me, the jets started going while Margarita pulled out a handheld jet that she held underwater. For thirty minutes, in the hot seawater, Margarita expertly moved the handheld jet and gave me an underwater massage. I was feeling so relaxed that I nearly fell asleep, but wouldn't let myself, because I didn't want to miss any part of this experience. My body and mind was in a state of pure relaxation. I could fall asleep at will. I didn't want this end.

When the jets were finished, I toweled off and moved into another room where there was another table waiting for me. "Now we are going to put seaweed mud all over your body. This is excellent for your skin and also increases your metabolism."

I didn't care about anything at this point. I laid down on the bed and Margarita started to spread the seaweed mud everywhere. She was turning me green. The mud felt good and it was very relaxing as Margarita massaged it onto me. Once my whole body was covered, she wrapped me in plastic and then put a blanket around me. The mud needed to stay on my body as the toxins came out.

I closed my eyes and stayed as still as possible. Then suddenly one of the best feelings in the world took over. I started getting my scalp and face massaged. She was using moisturizing massage oil that sent waves of comfort through every part of my body, physically and emotionally.

There was still more pampering to be done. When the mud wrap was over, Margarita led me into a private Swiss shower. Dozens of tiny jets started firing out as the mud was washed off. Margarita knew the perfect temperature for me.

I walked back into the room, this time for another round of healthy stuff to be rubbed all over me. A sea salt gel, designed to penetrate and rejuvenate the skin, was then applied. I felt a cooling sensation and learned that the gel would prepare my skin for the final, moisturizing process.

I took another Swiss Shower, then had sea kelp moisturizer applied. Margarita had me lie still and had the moisturizer soak in. "Don't shower again for at least an hour," Margarita said. "I don't think I need any more showering."

My skin felt like porcelain. It was shockingly smooth. I wanted to call my friends and have them meet me at the spa just so they could feel how smooth it was.

I got dressed and headed up to the Sea Grille Restaurant where I met my friend and ordered some lunch from the spa menu. This was one healthy day. We ate a delicious dish of vegetables and teriyaki shrimp, drank Pellegrino with lemon, slowly, and looked out at the ocean view the resort is known for. Life is really good at Gurney's.

A Unique Concept That Will Revolutionize Dental Implant Treatment

HAVE YOU LOST OR ARE YOU LOSING YOUR TEETH?

If so, you may be a candidate for Dental Implants.

At the office of Dr. Howard A. Popper we have placed thousands of implants since 1985, including Long Island's FIRST "Teeth in an Hour." THERE IS NO SUBSTITUTE FOR EXPERIENCE. Your life can be dramatically transformed with the immediate load – immediate function – immediate smile procedure utilizing THE NEW NOBEL GUIDE FOR COMPUTER-GUIDED, minimally invasive, flapless, painfree implant surgery. Dental implants improve appearance, comfort, speech, confidence, self-esteem and maintain your bone for a lifetime. Dental implants contribute to better overall health and improved quality of life for patients.

GIVE YOURSELF THE GIFT OF A PERMANENT SMILE NOW

Teeth in an Hour, the latest concept in High-Tech dentistry. Sophisticated 3-D radiology creates precise imaging of the jaw, and robotic technology in Sweden fabricates the permanent restoration which is placed with the Branemark System Implants - in the space of one hour.

The Branemark Novum System™ can provide patients with implants and permanent teeth all in one day, and the New ALL-ON-4 can provide low cost acrylic bridges in one day.

FIXED TEETH IN ONE DAY!

Implants can secure dentures, restore chewing and enjoyment of food, and impede progressive jawbone loss. No more wobbling dentures, irritated gums, gooey adhesives and filed-down teeth for bridgework. Single teeth to full mouth treatment, utilizing NOBEL PERFECT IMPLANTS for optimum esthetics..

Without good periodontal health, there cannot be good general health. Periodontal disease (commonly known as gum disease) can affect the state of your whole body. Over the past few years, studies have shown a definitive link between your oral health and your general health, "including heart disease and diabetes".

Traditional periodontal and implant therapy available with intravenous sedation, administered by a certified anesthesiologist.

Garlic

You should always keep a few cloves on hand in case the vampires come knocking on your door. Garlic, with its pungent aroma, is known to be repellent to these bloodsucking demons. But if that life-saving reason isn't enough for you, then it's time to be illuminated by all the fantastic functions of garlic in the body.

It was a rainy, drab weekend, and I got stuck out in the rain. Unfortunately, just walking around all day in damp jeans is enough to leave me with the chills and the sniffles. But even when you are hard on your immune system, there are still simple things you can do to boost up your immune support without taking medicine or (unfortunately) a day off work. Eating garlic is one of those things.

Garlic is a perennial herb that originated in India and central Asia. Now it grows abundantly all over the world. The garlic bulb is divided into cloves. Bulbs should be planted in the fall and dug up in the late spring to be dried out. Garlic is easy to grow and cheap to buy. The word "garlic" derives from the Anglo-Saxon "gar," meaning spear, and "leac," meaning leek. The words imitate its appearance, as the bulb looks like a spearhead and the cloves look like leeks.

Garlic is a microbial, which means it helps to destroy microorganisms. This means that the tiny little germs that seep into your lungs, especially at the change of seasons, run and hide when you eat garlic. The little germs, which seem to have spawned from the undead, are no match for the healing powers of this perennial herb. Super Garlic saves the day!

Eating two fresh garlic cloves daily, whether they are crushed into garlic bread or whipped into mashed potatoes, is antiviral. Whenever you battle with colds or the flu, it's a good idea to consume some garlic. It is also beneficial as a supplement for high blood pressure and high cholesterol. Tests have shown that ingredients in garlic act as a blood thinner, and are therefore useful to people with poor circulation. However, many of these tests have been questioned, because the ingredients don't linger in the bloodstream long enough to thin it out. Of course, if you have one of these conditions, you should talk to your doctor about other medicinal aids as well.

Garlic contains an essential oil called allicin. Allicin is antibacterial, antimicrobial, and antiviral. It contains vitamins A and C, amino acids, and fatty oil. According to scientific studies, though, it is probably not just one of the compounds present in garlic that has a healing effect. It is the combination of the many compounds that allows garlic to be such a self-defense mechanism.

One thing to keep in mind when using garlic for its medicinal properties: just as allowing a vampire into your house renders you powerless (watch a young Kiefer Sutherland in The Lost Boys), cooking garlic takes away many of its beneficial properties. As delicious as sautéed garlic is, the way to extract the most benefits from the herb is to eat it raw, either crushed or finely chopped. When administered in this manner, it has cleansing properties. Cooked garlic is still supposed to be beneficial to the cardiovascular system, but its properties as an antibiotic are limited. When consuming raw, crushed garlic, be sure not to overdo it. Too much raw garlic can be irritating to the digestive tract.

Eating raw garlic sounds pretty, well, raw, to many people. It definitely has a strong flavor, and that taste is going to linger with you for much of the day. But if you chop it up very fine and sprinkle it into your salad, or put it on top of a toasted baguette with butter, it's quite palatable. And if your significant other notices a change in your breath, you can counteract that overwhelming odor. Chew on some parsley after eating raw garlic to minimize the smell.

Whether you are adorning you kitchen with garlic cloves for flavor, health, or vampire repellant, try consuming a little bit of raw garlic every day (a tablespoon or two is sufficient). It will boost your immune system, which is your strongest line of defense in this germy germy world.

What the Wino and I Know

"Come, come, good wine is a good familiar creature if it be well used; exclaim no more against it." Shakespeare, Othello

I am sipping red wine as I write this article. It is a nod to progressive thought, perhaps, that I admit this without a moment's hesitation. Twenty five years ago, Pinot Noir in the afternoon might have been frowned upon. The world has changed for wine-enthusiasts who, while enjoying a hearty glass and discussing the intricacies and subtleties of this or that Bordeaux, can now rattle off a list of health benefits as well.

In Sleeper, Woody Allen awakes after 200 years to find that hamburgers, fries and milkshakes are health foods. You might liken this sentiment to the reaction to a "60 Minutes" segment from 1991, when host Morley Safer reported that red wine may actually reduce the risk of heart failure and disease, shedding light on what he coined "The French Paradox." This news broadcast addressed a question troubling health conscious Americans everywhere at that time, a question about what has always baffled Americans. The French.

Why is it that the French, who are known for eating inexcusable amounts of heart-stopping, artery-clogging saturated fats, exercising very little and smoking Galois cigarettes till the cows come home, have one of the lowest heart attack rates in the world?

At that time, the Reagan-era neo-prohibitionists were gaining ground and "Just Say No" posters littered classroom bulletin boards, displaying, among other illicit drug-related images, a wine bottle with a giant X through it. But this benchmark broadcast unleashed a red wine mania and California wine boom, at a time when morale in the wine industry was at its lowest.

The studies in the medical field reported that the French ate 30% more fat than Americans yet suffered 40% fewer heart attacks. Suddenly red wine seemed the nation's saving grace, or saving vice. Call it what you will but the fact remains – shelves emptied at liquor stores from coast to coast almost immediately. Within weeks, sales of red wine in the U.S. shot up 40%. Whoever argued that we don't believe everything we hear on television might recall that Gallo Winery in California had to put their leading brand of Burgundy on allocation and hire a team of guards to stave off fiends.

Since then, a mountain of evidence has supported the contention that moderate red wine consumption has beneficial health results, ranging from the prevention of cardiovascular and neurological diseases, cancer, strokes, and gum disease, to simply staving off the common cold.

Substances unique to red wine, such as flavanoids and tannins, due to their high antioxidant content, are responsible for reducing the risk of strokes and lowering cholesterol. They raise levels of high-density lipoproteins ("good cholesterol") in the blood and clear low-density lipoproteins ("bad cholesterol") from arterial walls. Research published in Thorax Magazine concluded that moderate drinkers have 13% more protection against cancer, and according to a Spanish study, get 44% fewer colds. Polyphenols, also in red wine, have an anti-inflammatory effect. Interestingly, parts of the world with high elevation vineyards, which actually turn out wines with high amounts of complex polyphenols, have an increased number of centenarians. Intake of red wine protects the brain and kidneys from oxidative stress caused by a high-cholesterol diet, according to research published in Clinical Nutrition.

The latest news, published in the US Journal of Dental Research, stated that red wine staves off peridontitis, a disease that affects gums and the bones around teeth often leading to tooth loss, and affects 65% of adults over 50 and 15% between the ages 21 and 50.

While recent studies have suggested that the scientific research supporting this theory is inconclusive, and that advantages of drinking red wine are, in fact, illusory; however, it seems as most of us hoped, a drink or two a day improves life expectancy. Careful studies of the statistics of longevity are still encouraging to the modest drinker. But bingers and lushes take heed. Over-consumption will not only counteract the health benefits, it can kill you. Moderate drinking means two glasses a day. "At the third cup, wine drinketh the man."

Since you're hearing this from a wino now, I understand your worry. But this news is not new. We had only to look to our great leaders and thinkers for this advice. Thucydides said the peoples of the Mediterranean first emerged from barbarianism when they learned to cultivate the vine. Keats said that wine is bottled poetry, proof that man is loved by God. When Dom Perignon first tasted it, he screamed "Come quickly, I am tasting the stars." So yes, Jesus had good reason to turn water to wine.

The Garden At Rock Cottage by Lance Brilliantine

A Grubby Affair to Deal With

If you spend hours on weekends gardening, you know nothing is more disappointing than to have your results eaten by the vermin living on the East End. Oh, these pests have a right to their space, I suppose, but need to be controlled if a garden is to survive.

Spring is the time when many critters wreak garden havoc. White grubs seem particularly voracious in spring, though the damage is probably the result of the previous fall when grubs voraciously ate to prepare for hibernation. Not only do grubs cause damage to lawns, where they create brown patches, they also reside in flowers beds where they attract squirrels, skunks, and raccoons who love to forage for the grubby feast.

White grubs are the larval form of scarab beetles. The most significant are: Japanese beetle (Popillia japonica); June beetle (Phyllophaga spp.); Chafer beetle (Cyclocephala spp. and Rhizotrogus majalis) ; Black Turfgrass beetle (Ataenius spretulus); and the Green June beetle (Cotinis nitida). All white grubs are similar in appearance, with creamy-colored, C-shaped bodies, reddish-brown heads and three pairs of short legs immediately behind the head.

While all grubs look alike at first glance, there are some differences. The arrangement of hairs and spines at the end area (called the raster) on the underside of the abdominal segments is different for each species. These patterns are distinguishable. For example, the arrangement of spines on Chafer grubs is random without clearly defined lines; on June beetle grubs they are arranged in two distinct lines; Japanese beetle grubs have a pattern of spines arranged in a "V" shape; and the Black Turfgrass beetle is distinguished by a small pad-like structure.

The major factor influencing development of damaging numbers of grubs seems to be soil moisture level. In years with normal-to-above normal rainfall, grub populations increase. Turf near well-watered flowerbeds and ornamentals favored by adult scarab beetles seem to be attacked the most frequently.

The easiest way to diagnose grub damage is to pull up some turf. If it rolls up easily, you probably have a grub problem. (The turf pulls up easily because grubs have eaten the roots.) If you dig into the lawn and flowerbeds with a shovel and see more than three grubs beneath the turf or in bed soil, you probably have a problem that needs treating.

If you treat grubs in spring, summer will bring a new batch of grubs so you will have to treat again in early August. Late summer/early fall treatments seem to work best because the grubs are most susceptible to biological and chemical insecticides at this time. They will not have had a chance to cause severe damage.

There are three strategies to use to control grubs. The most common is to use a systemic insecticide product such as Scott's "Grub-Ex" or Bayer's "Advanced Lawn Season Long Grub Control." These products can last for up to three months. While I shudder to think of their effect on the environment, they seem somewhat effective when applied in early May or June and again in August. They work by killing newly-hatched grubs in the soil while they are near the surface of the soil. In August they kill developing grubs that forage on roots.

A second approach involves adding beneficial nematodes of the species Neopaplecana or Heterorhabitis to lawn and garden areas. Nematodes are microscopic worms that are beneficial to gardens and plants. (They can be acquired through local nurseries.) Nematodes feed on soil insects. As long as the soil remains relatively moist, nematodes can live as long as 18 months before dying. These species are harmless to people, pets, and plants. They are a non-chemical way to destroy grubs. Unfortunately, it takes substantial time for a nematode population to develop to a size adequate to control grubs.

The third approach involves the use of milky spore products. Several strains of the bacterium, Bacillus popilliae, have been found to attack white grubs, though milky spore is most effective against Japanese beetle grubs. The bacterium is picked up by feeding grubs and causes the grub's body fluids to turn a milky-white before the grub's death. These products take two-to-three years to build to a level of effective control, and need to be replenished every three years or so.

If you see brown spots in your lawn, or have holes from foraging animals, be sure to test to determine if you have a grub infestation. Treating it will help to ensure a winning garden.

When Your Backyard Goes to Pot

Springtime, arguably the most beautiful time of year to relax and enjoy the Hamptons, is also one of the best times to begin work on your garden. In fact, springtime weather is ideal for growing flowers, because planting during the summer, with the heat typical of that time of year, makes it difficult for new additions to your garden to adapt and grow, not to mention that summer weather conditions aren't the most pleasant for gardeners. That said, and because many Hampton denizens consider their gardens to be among their most prized possessions, maintaining an awe-worthy garden is no easy feat, especially with all the competition in the Hamptons!

However, while there is no guarantee for a flourishing garden, setting up a gardening area that offers easy access, and a comprehensive assortment of important gardening tools (worktable, storage bins for glove and tools, a peg system, and rack for shovels and rakes……), is a great way to begin the process.

Potting sheds vary from one gardener to another, but there are a few basic tools that they all have in common. Trowels are used to fill flats with soil, while pruners are ideal for taking cuttings, and a pocket knife can easily open bags and seed packets. Having a hammer on hand for maintenance is also useful, along with a few pencils, pens, and plant labels.

For pricking out tiny seedlings, you may need to use a little ingenuity. Small spoons, cocktail forks, pencils, and Popsicle sticks are among the more common objects used for the job. Plastic bins abound in potting sheds. They can be used as a catchall for storing hose attachments, gardening gloves, balls of twine, and other small articles. Plastic bins can also be used for transplanting and repotting. For this you need two solid bins: one to catch soil as you remove a plant from its original container, and a second filled with fresh soil for the new pot.

The interior of an armoire should be able to hold most of these gardening essentials. Heavy items such as buckets of soil can be kept at the bottom, while some pockets can be attached inside the armoire to hold small, sharp tools such as shears. Simply rip the back pockets off a pair of pants (jeans work well), and attach them inside the door of the armoire with a drill and screws. Furthermore, a great way to keep track of what's planted in your garden is by tacking seed packets inside the armoire and writing information directly on the packets, such as when the plants were planted, and where they're located.

It's also easy to save space at the bottom of the armoire to keep gardening shoes. This way you can just slip them off and leave the dirt behind before going into your home. Racks and hooks can be mounted on the interior of the armoire to hang longer tools. Finally, if you are feeling truly inspired, you can paint the outside of the armoire with an oil-based paint. Painting the outside is also a great opportunity to get younger family members involved, while introducing them to the wonders of gardening and creativity.

However, for gardeners who like to keep their space more open, a viable alternative is a simple tabletop workstation for planting. A great base for a gardening table is an old desk. Simply cover the top of the desk and shelves with galvanized steel to protect them from dirt, then, apply a fresh coat of paint.

While potting sheds are widely available on the marketplace, they often tend to be far larger than what the typical fledgling gardener needs or wants for their garden. Indeed, while potting sheds in their truest form are small outbuildings dedicated solely to gardening activities, you do not necessarily need a separate structure to pot and propagate. Therefore, constructing your own area to satisfy your gardening needs is a great way to save on money and space, while enjoying the pleasures that comes with partaking in a hands on activity that can be done alone, or enjoyed with youngsters, friends, and family.

Hedges Make Good Neighbors

If it is true that fences make good neighbors, then hedges must make even better neighbors. After all, fences merely demark the property line, while hedges afford complete privacy. But for those who do not care for hedges, there are other ways to create privacy, including evergreen trees and vines.

We should begin with hedges, however, as they are so common here in the Hamptons. The most common plant used for hedges in the Hamptons is the privet shrub. Privets can reach a height of 15 feet and provide dense foliage that can be pruned into attractive hedges. They bear white flowers in late spring-early summer. After flowering, privets should be pruned several times throughout the summer. Frequent pruning yields bushier growth and, therefore, more privacy.

Although privets grow well in the Hamptons, they are not evergreen in this area, as anyone who has toured the Estate section of Southampton during the winter knows. Also, privets can spread quite aggressively, so they must be watched carefully. For these reasons, some prefer other options for creating privacy.

Those who like the idea of using shrubs for hedges can select the Boxwood plant, which is evergreen. Unfortunately, the boxwood hedge grows more slowly than the privet and also is less hardy. A better choice may be the mountain laurel, which does better in the northeast, but is also slow growing. There are many other varieties to chose from, each with its benefits and problems. A good place to begin a search for the right hedge is the website www.abouthedges.com.

Another option altogether is to plant evergreen trees. While trees will have some space between them, some people find them to be more attractive than hedges. Indeed, two homeowners in my neighborhood recently planted rows of trees for privacy, one of whom happens to be my next-door neighbor. Although our houses disappear from view during the summer fairly well, the trees will complete the sense of privacy and also create a block during the winter months. Of course, I am delighted that my neighbor did this, at no cost to me.

There are many varieties of trees that can be used, including the very fast-growing cone-shaped Thuja Green Giant. Another good choice is the Norway Spruce. There are even trees with other colored leaves (silvery/green being an example), if that would work in your garden. As long as a tree is fast growing and will do well in our hardness zone (Zone 7), it can be used to create a lovely barrier.

A third option, if you already have a fence in place, is to plant vines. Many vines grow very quickly on fences. For the typical four-foot fence, vines will not create privacy when you are standing, but it will block out the house when you are lounging around. If you happen to have eight-foot deer fencing, vines will completely block out your neighbor.

As with privets and trees, some vines lose their leaves and others are evergreen or partially evergreen. Many types of ivy are evergreen, as any visitor to an Ivy League school knows. On the other hand, there are some beautiful flowering vines that lose their leaves during the winter, such as rose vines. While these vines do not allow for privacy year-round, seeing a fence burst into flowers is wonderful.

Any good local nursery can help you make a decision that is good for you. Whatever option you choose will cost much less if you are willing to buy young plants and wait for them to grow fully over several years. If you want instant privacy, you will need more mature plants, which can be much more costly. And of course, the width of your required privacy wall will also determine how much you will need to spend. In all cases, however, once the plants are mature, you will have a natural and beautiful wall to block your neighbor's prying eyes!

Real Estates by Diane Strecker

Manhattan Broker Kathy Sloane, of Brown Harris Stevens, says that real estate is all about the color green; green as in money and as in views of green, like the park, outdoor gardens and terraces. City apartments with these amenities are skyrocketing and demanding higher prices than ever. "We are noticing about a 30% increase, if not more, in demand for luxury Manhattan residences with these features. Whereas is winter, the emphasis is heavy indoor detail." She has noticed that she is now receiving a high volume of calls with interest to her listings that include sweeping views of Central Park greenery on Fifth Avenue as well as The Trump Park Garden apartments. Townhouses with park and River views that she has listed on East 74th are also getting a lot of attention for the same reason.

Buyers are getting into an outdoorsy frame of mind. They will soon be leaving the city altogether and heading east for the summer or at least the summer weekends. Some will choose areas on the North Fork for relaxation and recreation. On the North Fork buyers or summer renters can choose from sound, bay, farm, or vineyard views. Exclusive hamlets such as Nassau Point and New Suffolk in the Town of Southold offer absolute tranquility and seclusion to the summer resident looking for peace and quiet. Currently for sale in Southold on the sound, is a 6-bedroom, 6-bath modern retreat with a private beach and sound views from every room. The open floor plan looks onto a deck the length of the entire home that has endless views of the LI Sound. It includes a grand master suite with cathedral ceilings and an oversized whirlpool bath. The lower level has a six-car garage that is large enough to accommodate a boat and also has a full bath & changing room. It is listed with Prudential Douglas Elliman at $3,195,000.

On the opposite fork of the East End, in Montauk, it is all about commercial real estate for sale. It seems as if all the motels are on the market. Multiple resort properties in the oceanside town that have not changed hands for decades are now on the market since the very early spring and the list seems to be getting longer all of the time. The Crows Nest, priced at $4.8 million, is a popular tourist spot on the corner of Old Westlake Drive and Montauk Highway that has both a 14-room motel and 115-seat restaurant, can now be added to the many that are for sale. Another is the Shepherds Neck Inn on Lake Montauk on Second House Road that has just gone to contract with a Manhattan development team called Wavestone Properties. They plan to restore and expand the property keeping with the Tudor-style ambiance brought to the small town by Montauk Manor developer Carl Fisher so many years ago. The plans for the new resort include expanding on the property's 2 vacant acres by building a new restaurant, pool and spa. The intention is to draw year-round big spenders by offering a high level of services and amenities. The existing main building houses 60 guest rooms. It was originally listed dually with its sister property on the ocean in town, Shepherds Beach at $8,700,000. The exact sale price remains undisclosed. Ruschmeyers Inn on Fort Pond at $4 million, the famed Memory Motel in town, The 1950s Lido at $2.2 million, the 1960s Oceanside Motel at the brink of town on the ocean at $7 million, and the Oceanside Farmers Market in town at $3 million, are all still available. The sudden surge of plentiful business opportunities that have simultaneously cropped up in Montauk are a result of the catapulting real estate values that have tripled in a 3-year period. Current owners realize that they will see this kind of a cash-out only once in a lifetime and are doing just that, cashing out. Many are coming away with small fortunes. The profit margins have been phenomenal.

Trump Ocean Club in Panama

In other resort & real estate news Donald Trump has just completed his first Luxury Tower Development in Latin America, the Trump Ocean Club, International Hotel & Tower in Panama. It is the first of its kind, scale, and splendor in the region and is to be the new benchmark representing high-end real estate in Latin America. Trump has also recently bought hundreds of acres of land in Upstate New York at the unfathomable sum of $100,000,000 in the name of preservation.

EARTH DAY PROGRESS REPORT
Dear Dan,

After observing my carpenter nail bead board on the roof of my porch this rainy day here in The Hamptons – just in case I want to change professions – last night I snuggled up with my parrot, the new HK .40 with an extra clip just in case, and a bag of popcorn, and proceeded to watch the much-awaited HBO special on Global Warming. I had to tape the broadcast specials on the oil crisis and another on Global Warming on CNN. Both subjects of course have grand political undertones for The White House, and especially for the loser, spewing from the nether regions of the former politician-turned-guru who invented the Internet.

In the meanwhile, while fantasy was being depicted in our media scaring the living nightlights out of me, reality intruded in the report below. Funny thing about reality, how it always intrudes on one's peace with living comfortably before the next horror flick from Hollywood (a Michael Moore Production), the sequel to The Day After, "The Sky is Falling!" is released.

One needs to be reminded daily that skepticism in the face of the media onslaught to achieve the political agenda of the Party of Diversion is always wise. www.nationalcenter.org/EarthDay06Progress.htm)

And just when I was getting comfortable again in my alarmist stupor, I was reminded about Hurricane Katrina (yes, the one summoned by the president with the push of a button to punish black people for voting for his opponents) and the very same well-meaning scientists telling us that ocean surface temperatures – you guessed it – caused by Global Warming and the "Greenhouse Effect", and you guessed it again...cause more frequent hurricanes of higher severity. Again that reality, damn it, intruded...and below are the figures from the National Hurricane Center posted – and you didn't guess this one BEFORE Hurricane Katrina struck. Note the columns marked ALL and MAJOR. Both statistics disagree with the scientists who would be far better off at making horror flicks instead of the fat ass foreign policy/military strategist/historian Moore. (www.nhc.noaa.gov/pastdec.shtm)

No one denies Global Warming. No legitimate scientist will deny that global warming of a similar kind occurred 5000 and 8000 years ago either. During Biblical times the Mideast region was far more lush and fertile than it is today. And cyclical warming AND cooling – yes, Global Cooling measured just thirty years ago (http://www.globalclimate.org/Newsweek.htm) occurred before the INDUSTRIAL REVOLUTION due to man's agricultural activities. Don't axe (I'm part black, don't tell anyone).... But the very same political groups warned about Global Cooling in the seventies!

And since Global Warming was discovered on Mars as recently as a few months ago by NASA scientists, one might want to explain those other occurrences too before jumping to the conclusion that International Socialism is the answer to Industrial Capitalism.

YEAH FOR US!
Dear Dan and David,

I wanted to extend my appreciation to David and to thank one of your writers, Robin Stuart (R.B. Stuart), for doing such a great and thorough job on the article she wrote about my family and our business at Strong's Marine in Dans Papers last week.

It was refreshing that she had taken time before visiting with us to prepare her with really good questions.

Thanks again and we look forward to seeing Robin Stuart again soon at Strong's Marine.

Happy Boating.

BANKING BUYOUT BLOWOUT?
Dear Dan,

I have been reading the many stories about the purchase of North Fork Bank by Capital One and how things are not going to change as a result of the buyout.

I have been a customer of North Fork Bank for fifteen years and have nothing but praise for the personal attention I get from the branch staff. If I have a problem, they will sit with me and make every effort to help me. They are always willing to listen and do what is necessary to make things right.

My experience with Capital One is totally opposite and I fear that the present NFB community minded service standards will go out the window when the takeover occurs.

Police Blotter

Mercedes-Benz Hit

A woman in Bridgehampton reported to police that her Mercedes-Benz was hit while parked in a public parking lot. The driver that hit her car had left the scene of the accident. The driver did leave a note for the woman that read, "Sorry for damaging your car and running away, but just the bumper on your Mercedes-Benz is worth more money than the amount of money I earn in a year."

Signs Upside Down

Someone called police to report that a couple of street signs were turned upside down. East Hampton Police officers righted the signs after responding to the call. In a related story, hundreds of drivers called the East Hampton Map and Direction Company, complaining that the maps that they were offering were completely backwards.

Loud Church

A woman in East Hampton complained to police that too much noise was coming from a church near her home. People in charge at the Church agreed to turn down the loudspeakers. A woman called police to complain that a church was being too loud.

Strange Criminal

A woman in Noyac reported to police that somebody used a sledgehammer to smash open the door of her house. Nothing was stolen from the home, but there were reports from the woman that she thought things had been moved around the house. Police believe that the suspect just really hated seeing a couch in the woman's kitchen and not her living room and simply could not take it any more.

Keyed Car

A man in Water Mill reported to police that his taillight was broken and somebody had keyed a long line on the side of his truck. He was reported saying to police, "Boy, I wish I could've caught him doing it. I'd have given anything to catch that jerk doing it. It'd been worth him doing it just so I could've caught him doing it. I mean, you just don't mess with another man's automobile." To which police said, "It's just against the rules."

Rock Thrown

An employee at a gas station in Hampton Bays reported to police that somebody threw a rock at a Dodge Caravan that was parked there. The attendant was quoted saying, "The rock almost hit a man who dodged out of the way when it was thrown. I really thought it was ironic that the car was a Dodge."

One Really Big Jerk

Somebody broke into a home in Westhampton and started a fire in the fireplace, which damaged the wall above it, and they also painted graffiti on several walls throughout the home. Police were quoted saying, "Wow, whoever did this is a huge jerk."

The Loaner

A man in Hampton Bays lent his car to a woman whose last name and phone number he did not know. He called police after he realized that the woman did not return his car when she said she would. The man learned a valuable lesson; don't lend your car out to strangers.

IT'S TIME TO PAY OFF EQUITY LOANS AND LOWER MORTGAGE PAYMENTS BY 45%

Recent increases in the prime rate have homeowners scrambling to consolidate high rate home equity loans and lines of credit.

Many took out these loans when banks were pushing them as a replacement for conventional mortgages and enticing consumers with no closing cost teasers. Well, now it's time to anti up.

"Equity loans should not be used for long term financing" says John Sauro, President of North Atlantic Mortgage Corp. "It's likely the prime rate will increase another half percent before years end, pushing homeowner's payments even higher"

So what should you do?

Many have decided to refinance their first mortgage and the equity loan into one mortgage while rates are still low. "You can still get a great rate and there are programs available that can considerably lower monthly payments. A five minute consultation could result in significant savings."

For more information or to receive a Free Report on this and other financing strategies call North Atlantic Mortgage at:
